

WUTHERING HEIGHTS

Emily Bronte

WITH AN INTRODUCTION
V S PRITCHETT

---

HOUGHTON MIFFLIN COMPANY
Boston • The Riverside Press Cambridge

Emily Brontë 1818-1848

WUTHERING HEIGHTS was first published in 1847

COPYRIGHT ©, 1956, BY V S PRITCHETT

ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

The Riverside Press

CAMBRIDGE MASSACHUSETTS

PRINTED IN THE U S A

INTRODUCTION

By V S PRITCHETT

~~~~~

WUTHERING HEIGHTS is unique among English novels. Nothing like it exists before or after its time. Though echoes from the plain narrative of Defoe, the domestic clatter of Scott, the morbid preoccupation of Richardson's Clarissa may be thought to be heard faintly in it, to those who read widely these suggest no continuation of the English tradition. That tradition is hard-headed, moralistic, and sociable, vegetating in good sense and a general experience of the world. Even later novelists like Hardy, Meredith, and D. H. Lawrence who, in their differing ways, had something of Emily Brontë's feeling for the unity of man and nature, lack the wildness of her spirit. They argue, they illustrate, they preach. In her, the poetic and visionary imagination overpowers all else; she is alone in being without psychological dismay. For her the world is a ferocious hunting ground and she delights in its beauty, in that respect she sees no difference between mountain, animal, or man. She does not seek out the quotidian consolations of everyday life, but, accepting them, as we all must, she thinks of them as perfunctory, with the scorn of the saint for the flesh. It is not surprising that Wuthering Heights shocked the few people who read it when it was published in 1847, the year before her death. The book does, or should, shock ourselves. It was utterly alien to the early Victorian temper, it was wicked without the relief of licence. These Victorians had agreed to relegate horror, hatred, violence, cruelty, and the supernatural to the morbid regions of the Gothic novel, these states found no place in their conception of love or in their mild domestic Christianity. They saw that Emily Brontë's nature was pagan and without mercy. In her famous adoring preface to Wuthering Heights, her sister Charlotte herself was troubled in conscience by the imagination of the sister whose genius she knew to be greater than her own, and she was startled by the violence and emphasis of the book. Above all she was alarmed by Heathcliff who appears as a figure of pure evil, at a time when the English mind had certainly decided to plump for right and wrong instead of good and evil. Charlotte Brontë attributed the darkness of her sister's view to her immaturity and ignorance of the world. Certainly Emily Brontë knew the moorland people and their characters thoroughly well, for no one has written upon them so intimately, but (Charlotte thought) Emily was aloof by nature, rarely saw anything of her neighbours except when she went out once a week to church, and had really gathered all her information from village hearsay. Such gossip is commonly malicious, over-dramatic, and has unnatural vividness, it is simplified and needs to be toned down by a wider, kinder, and more truthful experience of the lives in question. The defence is generous, we need not doubt that Emily's experience of people was limited, what startles us is that upon a basis so restricted there reposed the mature temperaments of the mystic and the poet. Simplifications, abstractions, unhuman her people are not. They are made real, complex, dramatic and rich by her power of meditation. Her spirit is sombre and lonely but it knows and conveys an energy, an ecstasy, and a calm the congenial cannot give us and which we recognise at once. She recognises the frightening human right to loneliness.

In the first part of Wuthering Heights, Emily Brontë states her difference from the English novelists clearly when she sets down the housekeeper's reflection on the early days of Catherine Earnshaw's marriage. The dramatic effect of the casual words, in the narrative, strikes the reader suddenly like the east wind.

I believe I may assert that they were really in possession of deep and growing happiness.

It ended. Well, we must be for ourselves in the long run, the mild and generous are only more justly selfish than the domineering.

"Only more justly"—what little regard she has for the just! How primitive is her regard for power, for the insatiable self. The self, in its absolute sense and isolation, is her subject. Even when Catherine dies and her gentle husband grieves, the narrator coldly notes that his grieving love is selfish, for it would deny her the peace of heaven, and that, in Catherine's case, the peace of heaven is doubtful. And again when Heathcliff curses Catherine after her death, the self is absolute.

"May she wake in torment!" he cried, with frightful vehemence, stamping his foot, and groaning in a sudden paroxysm of ungovernable passion "Why, she's a liar to the end! Where is she? Not there—not in heaven—not perished—where? Oh, you said you cared nothing for my sufferings! And I pray one prayer—I repeat it till my tongue stiffens—Catherine Earnshaw, may you not rest, as long as I am living! You say I killed you—haunt me then! The murdered do haunt their murderers I believe—I know that ghosts have wandered on earth Be with me always—take any form—drive me mad! only do not leave me in this abyss, where I cannot find you! Oh, God! it is unutterable! I cannot live without my life! I cannot live without my soul!"

A psychologist would say—and it has been said—that the passion of Heathcliff and Catherine is one that has not outgrown the innocent ferocity of childhood, it is not sensual And this has been plausibly explained as a consequence of the tabu on incest, for Heathcliff, though often passing for a servant, is virtually an adopted brother They are doomed to the perversity of an eternal pursuit But explanations are one thing, what is stated by the novelist is another, and with that only the overwhelmed reader of the novel is rightly concerned Emily Bronte takes her stand on men and women in their solitude Catherine's love of Heathcliff is a necessity for herself, it is not a means of communicating with him It makes her more powerful, if it destroys him—well, destruction is part of nature, too

"My love for Heathcliff resembles the eternal rocks beneath—a source of little visible delight, but necessary Nelly, I am Heathcliff—he's always, always in my mind—not as a pleasure, any more than I am always a pleasure to myself—but, as my own being"

Emily Bronte was born in 1818 and died, listening with irony to the first hostile and uncomprehending reviews of her novel, at the age of 30 in 1848 The story of the three sisters, writing and all dying young in the loneliness of their father's rectory on the edge of the Yorkshire moors, has often been written I need only draw out two or three aspects of it They were not suddenly writers They were immensely gifted and had written continually since childhood, their chief works being the fabulous and continuous chronicles of Angria and Gondal Many children create these daydream worlds and then drop them The Brontes continued, for reasons we do not know, to live in their dream until well on into their twenties Charlotte indeed broke with it, but with great pain to herself, Anne, the youngest, slid from it into the day dream of religious melancholy, only Emily, handsome, aloof, practical, and exalted, stayed firmly within it. We have M Héger's remarkable words about the character of Emily when she was briefly and unhappily at his school in Brussels. Mrs Gaskell has reported them in her Life of Charlotte Brontë

Emily had a head for logic, and a capability of argument, unusual in a man, and rare indeed in a woman, according to M Héger. Impairing the force of this gift, was her stubborn tenacity of will, which rendered her obtuse to all reasoning where her own wishes, or her own sense of right, was concerned. "She should have been a man—a great navigator," said M Héger in speaking of her. "Her powerful reason would have deduced new spheres of discovery from the knowledge of the old, and her strong, imperious will would never have been daunted by opposition or difficulty, never have given way but with life." And yet, moreover, her faculty of imagination was such that, if she had written a history, her view of scenes and characters would have been so vivid, and so powerfully expressed, and supported by such a show of argument, that it would have dominated over the reader, whatever might have been his previous opinions, or his cooler perceptions of its truth.

A fact of great importance is that the sisters were of uprooted Celtic race. All the daily influences of their early life come from Yorkshire and the moors and the hard morality of its uncouth and lawless people, but the force of their Cornish and above all their Irish parentage was more powerfully formative. Brontë père was an Irish peasant from County Down who had scraped and fought to get to Cambridge and become a clergyman. He had the Irish eloquence, temper, violence, the love of battle and heroes, his passions were not easy to live with, he became a notorious eccentric. There are tales of him chopping up chairs, throwing rugs on the fire, and firing pistols out of the window. Whether they are true or not, it is certain that his mind and heart had little in common with those of the Anglo-Saxon melting pot. The mother was a mild Cornish lady and died very young.

If Emily Brontë saw people as energies and life as fable, if she saw nature with the innocent, wild, and amoral animal eye, it was by native inheritance. Yet Wuthering Heights is no Celtic fantasy based on Yorkshire life, it is unlike anything we can think of in Irish literature. There has been a conjunction of two minds in her. In her time, in living memory, and very likely still, the people of the moorland villages and farms were of a lawless, blunt, opinionated disposition Hostile to strangers, scornful of the amenities of life, brutal in their habit of outspoken truthfulness which, on their lips, sounds and is combative and merciless, they are great haters They are pure, primitive Scandinavian practical, terse, contemptuous, extreme lovers of money, inarticulate and unimaginative That they are good, kindly, hospitable folk, delighting in their energy, is also true They do not easily feel, but when they do, they feel profoundly and for life But the traveller from southern England and from gentler countries always notices at once the drastic in their character One must not exaggerate this What the men and women of the Yorkshire moors are showing, as they face the stranger with a hard, open, quizzical glitter in their eyes, is not hostility, they are testing out They plant all they are, all they represent, gracefully and unyieldingly before us Outrage is their natural world

The bearing of this upon Wuthering Heights will be plain immediately to everyone who knows these people On the level of document, the novel is utterly faithful and tells a story that was not and is not out of the common in those parts Both the moral Lintons and the wild Earnshaws belong there Their surrenders and violences belong to that world, for in this strange county it must be remembered that George Fox, the Quaker mystic who saw visions of towns bathed in blood, had his greatest success Severe puritanism was at home with oddity and brutality Such a character is portrayed in the servant, Joseph The people have been formed by a grey, intemperate, and monotonous scene, they have been exposed to the northern wind and a hard climate Their fields are walled by stone, their houses are like old forts Wherever there are people, there is stone—and they seem as hard as they stand silently under the northern drizzle The pleasure of the moors lies in its short moments of sunlight and in the sound of its streams The Yorkshire ear is acute for these delights Emily Bronte caught their subtle variety by her continuous joy in nature

Gimmerton chapel bells were still ringing, and the full, mellow flow of the beck in the valley came soothingly on the ear It was a sweet substitute for the yet absent murmur of the summer foliage which drowned that music about the Grange when the trees were in leaf At Wuthering Heights it always sounded on quiet days, following a great thaw, or a season of steady rain

These are the sights and sounds that soften a hard world

It is important that Emily Brontë approves this world. We know that she hated to leave it. She puts the outer shell of her narrative into the hands of a stranger. Mr Lockwood comes from more civilised parts and his role is to show that the civilised life has nothing in common with the life of feeling. "These people," he says, "do live more in earnest, more in themselves and less in surface-change, and frivolous external things. I could imagine a love for life here almost possible." Some critics, noticing that Mr Lockwood is a condescending prig, a passive on-looker, will-less and incapable of love altogether, have regarded him as a false start in Emily Brontë's novel, and contend that it suffers from the division of narrative between Nelly Dean and himself. I cannot agree. If Mr Lockwood was a false start, then the author was lucky, the logic of her construction is masterly. There is nothing careless or amateur about its architecture. People as violent as this, a story as strong and outlandish, needs the double focus. The triumph is Nelly, but the story cannot be left to her, she is too greatly implicated. She is the shrewd, plain Yorkshire stuff, but as an eavesdropper, nurse, messenger, and self-appointed spy, she is too much a character to be trusted with an absolute narration, as well ask the nurse in Romeo and Juliet to tell the story of the play. As a moralist she has the merit of showing us how to succeed or fail with the violent. When the first Catherine strikes young Edgar Linton on the face, the young man turns away frightened by the revelation of physical violence and ashamed of the woman who has displayed it. Nelly sees him turn back and at once foresees his future life: he is doomed. He will never be Catherine's master and, of course, in the sense she needs or desires, never can be. Nelly knows her own people. You have got to stand up to them, when the drunken Hindley threatens to ram the knife down her throat and pushes the point against her teeth, she spits at him and tells him the knife tastes badly. She is an obdurate architect of the tragedy, for if she had told Catherine that Heathcliff was listening, the great confession scene—one of those moments when we think of Emily Brontë as Shakespearean and certainly closer to the Elizabethan dramatists than to the English novelists—would not have had its tragic climax.

After the devastation of the first half of Wuthering Heights, one is bound to have difficulty in adapting the mind to the milder second Catherine, and many critics have objected to this sequel

Heathcliff is black-hearted, the devil, an energy in the first half, and is tractable only in love, but when the first Catherine destroys him he becomes ignoble and vicious, a mean and vengeful northern farmer. It is a role without nobility. The first Catherine is destructive, the second, though capricious, lacks the fatal defect of violence, and we see Emily Brontë's point. The difference is not between passion and love, but between love that is a vision of the self—"I am Heathcliff"—and which never flows beyond the fingertips of the lover but is encased, as it were, in her, and the love that flows outward beyond the person to the object and makes that third being we call "the lovers." We have moved from good and evil to right and wrong, from Paradise recklessly lost to Paradise laboriously regained. But beyond this is the stoical and fundamentally unhopeful meaning of the pagan spirit: if time gives birth to evils, only time eventually annuls them. Emily Brontë's ambition has, what M. Hégier noted in her character, a masculine logical power. She does not, in Heathcliff's death, allow us to forget what a passion "for life" is, and we hear its wild note, still unappeased, in the serene chord of the end.

When we have said that the subject of Wuthering Heights is the self alone, that is to say, the soul, we find that Emily Brontë sees two elements in the soul from which, in Nature, we avert our eyes: the pleasure of inflicting cruelty and torture. She did not flinch before that spectacle. Threats of murder are common in the book, even excessive. She lived in a society which carried the power test to savage lengths. These hard-drinking, hard-living, violent people let fly. To set dogs on a visitor, beat children or watch them crack their skulls, to be cruel to animals, to terrorise body and mind and, in passion or grief, to injure themselves too, was natural to them and an important part of Emily Brontë's strange imagination. We see Heathcliff beating his head against a tree and spattered with his own blood. For Catherine and Heathcliff to accuse each other of murder is, as we have seen, their nature. It is curious that this isolated novelist seems to have an insight into the violence of industrial society, when she makes her devil a slum orphan. Heathcliff's swarthinness or darkness is, perhaps, a symbol of the oppressed poor, and there is the double feeling conveyed that the poor are to be pitied and saved and that they are also an embodiment of pure evil. Much is made, at intervals in the tale, of the subservience of servant to master, and this, indeed, the first Catherine exploits in the cruelties she inflicts upon Heathcliff. There is a good deal of the male in her and it is quite clear that her intention towards Heathcliff is not only masterful but perverse. She will destroy her life, but her victim will be morally destroyed. Heathcliff is the slave turned master, he could run a concentration camp and, indeed, that is what his household is. If we object, in the second part, that Emily Brontë piles it on (the scene in which the puppies are hanged and even the death scene in which it is revealed that Catherine is dying in childbirth and of her husband's child) and with almost childish lust, it must also be said that in the matter of the murder of souls she perceives truthfully. Pride gives Heathcliff a deadly perception. His obsession has its subtleties.

"You teach me," he cries, "how cruel you've been—cruel and false. Why did you despise me? Why did you betray your own heart, Cathy? I have not one word of comfort—you deserve this. You have killed yourself. It is hard to forgive, and to look at those eyes, and feel those wasted hands. Kiss me again, and don't let me see your eyes! I forgive what you have done to me. I love my murderer—but yours! How can I?"

Again, that is Elizabethan. Murdering me, she loves me, murdering herself, she betrays me. The demands of the self alone are inexorable. One has no right (he says) to reject one's own love, for there lies damnation. Yet, even to be damned (this serene novelist conveys to us) is not so terrible. There is the silence and peace of the earth, and Catherine will fulfil that desire of hers which was to be cast out of heaven because she loved the earth too much and wished to be absorbed into nature and the forgetfulness of time. Not mercy, not redemption, but forgetfulness.

It is said that Heathcliff is incredible, but that is because he embodies—and Catherine does not—a permanent human myth: the myth of the Devil or Evil One, the Don Juan or killer, the rebel against the power of the family. His only predecessor in English literature is Richardson's Lovelace (Byronism is not a character but a state of mind). Heathcliff—like Lovelace—has the desire to destroy the family who thwart him in destroying the pursued woman, and there are lines in Wuthering Heights which might have come out of Lovelace's letters. The cruel are those who have suffered cruelties.

"But at last, I think she begins to know me—I don't perceive the silly smiles and grimaces that provoked me, at first, and the senseless incapability of discerning that I was in earnest when I gave her my opinion of her infatuation, and herself—It was a marvelous effect of perspicacity to discover that I did not love her I believed, at one time, no lessons could teach her that<sup>1</sup> and yet it is poorly learnt, for this morning she announced, as a piece of appalling intelligence, that I had actually succeeded in making her hate me! Are you sure you hate me? If I let you alone for half-a-day, won't you come sighing and wheedling to me again? I dare say she would rather I had seemed all tenderness before you, it wounds her vanity to have the truth exposed ”

But Heathcliff cannot sustain that polished note He lacks the force of Lovelace's male intellect He is too sullen and uncertain, he brutalises but does not dominate He never loses his past as an underdog and only part of him experiences tragedy the part that loves His tragedy lies less in the story itself than in some untold part of his early life, a soul had been sown in him but had never grown And when we say that the love of Catherine and Heathcliff is not one of the great love affairs, we mean—as many passages most movingly show—that, unlike the love of the great ones, it is an attempt to get back to their childhood and its sexless companionship Hence the perversity and pathos of their relationship The power of Wuthering Heights springs from the innocence of the writer and from her mastery of all her means where one might have expected rhetoric, there is plainness, where delirium, a homely exactitude, where vagueness, logical construction, where melodrama, an elaborate perception working among glaring and terrible things

A NOTE ON THIS EDITION

---

The text of Wuthering Heights has an interesting history. The first edition, carelessly printed, was published in 1847. In 1850, two years after Emily Brontë's death, a second edition was brought out under the editorship of her older sister Charlotte, who not only corrected errors in the first edition, but also made some changes in the punctuation, in the text, and particularly in the spelling of the Yorkshire dialect spoken by some of the characters. Later, in other hands, further changes were made in the punctuation and paragraphing, and these, along with various typographical slips, tended to be perpetuated from one reprinting to another. In 1931 Basil Blackwell, publisher, of Oxford, brought out the Shakespeare Head edition, which restored the text of 1847 as collated with that of 1850.

The present text follows the Shakespeare Head edition, with the kind permission of the publisher. A few emendations have, however, been made in the punctuation where it seemed likely that faithful adherence to the restored and collated text would confuse the modern American reader. Several of these changes concern the punctuation of dialogue within dialogue.

In addition to the novel itself, this edition includes Charlotte Brontë's "Editor's Preface" and "Biographical Notice of Ellis and Acton Bell," which she wrote for the 1850 edition under the signature "Currer Bell." The considerations which led the three Brontë sisters, Charlotte, Emily, and Anne, to use the pen-names Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell, respectively, are discussed by Charlotte in the "Biographical Notice."

THE PUBLISHERS

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICE

OF ELLIS AND ACTON BELL

~~~~~

IT HAS been thought that all the works published under the names of Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell, were, in reality, the production of one person. This mistake I endeavoured to rectify by a few words of disclaimer prefixed to the third edition of Jane Eyre. These, too, it appears, failed to gain general credence, and now, on the occasion of a reprint of Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey, I am advised distinctly to state how the case really stands.

Indeed, I feel myself that it is time the obscurity attending those two names—Ellis and Acton—was done away. The little mystery, which formerly yielded some harmless pleasure, has lost its interest, circumstances are changed. It becomes, then, my duty to explain briefly the origin and authorship of the books written by Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell.

About five years ago, my two sisters and myself, after a somewhat prolonged period of separation, found ourselves reunited, and at home. Resident in a remote district where education had made little progress, and where, consequently, there was no inducement to seek social intercourse beyond our own domestic circle, we were wholly dependent on ourselves and each other, on books and study, for the enjoyments and occupations of life. The highest stimulus, as well as the liveliest pleasure we had known from childhood upwards, lay in attempts at literary composition, formerly we used to show each other what we wrote, but of late years this habit of communication and consultation had been discontinued, hence it ensued, that we were mutually ignorant of the progress we might respectively have made.

One day, in the autumn of 1845, I accidentally lighted on a MS. volume of verse in my sister Emily's handwriting. Of course, I was not surprised, knowing that she could and did write verse. I looked it over, and something more than surprise seized me,— a deep conviction that these were not common effusions, nor at all like the poetry women generally write I thought them condensed and terse, vigorous and genuine To my ear, they had also a peculiar music—wild, melancholy, and elevating

My sister Emily was not a person of demonstrative character, nor one, on the recesses of whose mind and feelings, even those nearest and dearest to her could, with impunity, intrude unlicensed, it took hours to reconcile her to the discovery I had made, and days to persuade her that such poems merited publication I knew, however, that a mind like hers could not be without some latent spark of honourable ambition, and refused to be discouraged in my attempts to fan that spark to flame

Meantime, my younger sister quietly produced some of her own compositions, intimating that since Emily's had given me pleasure, I might like to look at hers I could not but be a partial judge, yet I thought that these verses too had a sweet and sincere pathos of their own

We had very early cherished the dream of one day becoming authors This dream, never relinquished even when distance divided and absorbing tasks occupied us, now suddenly acquired strength and consistency it took the character of a resolve We agreed to arrange a small selection of our poems, and, if possible, get them printed Averse to personal publicity, we veiled our own names under those of Currer, Ellis, and Acton Bell, the ambiguous choice being dictated by a sort of conscientious scruple at assuming Christian names positively masculine, while we did not like to declare ourselves women, because—without at that time suspecting that our mode of writing and thinking was not what is called "feminine"—we had a vague impression that authoresses are liable to be looked on with prejudice, we had noticed how critics sometimes use for their chastisement the weapon of personality, and for their reward, a flattery, which is not true praise

The bringing out of our little book was hard work As was to be expected, neither we nor our poems were at all wanted, but for this we had been prepared at the outset, though inexperienced ourselves, we had read the experience of others The great puzzle lay in the difficulty of getting answers of any kind from the publishers to whom we applied Being greatly harassed by this obstacle, I ventured to apply to the Messrs Chambers, of Edinburgh, for a word of advice, they may have forgotten the circumstance, but I have not, for from them I received a brief and business-like but civil and sensible reply, on which we acted, and at last made a way

The book was printed it is scarcely known, and all of it that merits to be known are the poems of Ellis Bell The fixed conviction I held, and hold, of the worth of these poems has not indeed received the confirmation of much favourable criticism, but I must retain it notwithstanding

Ill-success failed to crush us the mere effort to succeed had given a wonderful zest to existence, it must be pursued We each set to work on a prose tale Ellis Bell produced Wuthering Heights, Acton Bell Agnes Grey, and Currer Bell also wrote a narrative in one volume These MSS were perseveringly obtruded upon various publishers for the space of a year and a half, usually, their fate was an ignominious and abrupt dismissal

At last Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey were accepted on terms somewhat impoverishing to the two authors, Currer Bell's book found acceptance nowhere, nor any acknowledgment of merit, so that something like the chill of despair began to invade his heart As a forlorn hope, he tried one publishing house more—Messrs Smith and Elder Ere long, in a much shorter space than that on which experience had taught him to calculate—there came a letter, which he opened in the dreary expectation of finding two hard hopeless lines, intimating that Messrs Smith and Elder “were not disposed to publish the MS,” and, instead, he took out of the envelope a letter of two pages He read it trembling It declined, indeed, to publish that tale, for business reasons, but it discussed its merits and demerits so courteously, so considerately, in a spirit so rational, with a discrimination so enlightened, that this very refusal cheered the author better than a vulgarly-expressed acceptance would have done It was added, that a work in three volumes would meet with careful attention

I was then just completing Jane Eyre, at which I had been working while the one volume tale was plodding its weary round in London in three weeks I sent it off, friendly and skilful hands took it in This was in the commencement of September 1847, it came out before the close of October following, while Wuthering Heights and Agnes Grey, my sisters' works, which had already been in the press for months, still lingered under a different management immature but very real powers revealed in Wuthering Heights were scarcely recognised, its import and nature were misunderstood, the identity of its author was misrepresented, it was said that this was an earlier and ruder attempt of the same pen which had produced Jane Eyre. Unjust and grievous error! We laughed at it at first, but I deeply lament it now. Hence, I fear, arose a prejudice against the book. That writer who could attempt to palm off an inferior and immature production under cover of one successful effort, must indeed be unduly eager after the secondary and sordid result of authorship, and pitifully indifferent to its true and honourable meed. If reviewers and the public truly believed this, no wonder that they looked darkly on the cheat.

They appeared at last Critics failed to do them justice The

Yet I must not be understood to make these things subject for reproach or complaint, I dare not do so, respect for my sister's memory forbids me. By her any such querulous manifestation would have been regarded as an unworthy, and offensive weakness.

It is my duty, as well as my pleasure, to acknowledge one exception to the general rule of criticism. One writer,* endowed with the keen vision and fine sympathies of genius, has discerned the real nature of Wuthering Heights, and has, with equal accuracy, noted its beauties and touched on its faults. Too often do reviewers remind us of the mob of Astrologers, Chaldeans, and Soothsayers gathered before the "writing on the wall," and unable to read the characters or make known the interpretation. We have a right to rejoice when a true seer comes at last, some man in whom is an excellent spirit, to whom have been given light, wisdom, and understanding, who can accurately read the "Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin" of an original mind (however unripe, however inefficiently cultivated and partially expanded that mind may be), and who can say with confidence, "This is the interpretation thereof."

Yet even the writer to whom I allude shares the mistake about the authorship, and does me the injustice to suppose that there was equivocation in my former rejection of this honour (as an honour, I regard it). May I assure him that I would scorn in this and in every other case to deal in equivocation, I believe language to have been given us to make our meaning clear, and not to wrap it in dishonest doubt.

* See the Palladium for September 1850.

The Tenant of Wildfell Hall by Acton Bell, had likewise an unfavourable reception. At this I cannot wonder. The choice of subject was an entire mistake. Nothing less congruous with the writer's nature could be conceived. The motives which dictated this choice were pure, but, I think, slightly morbid. She had, in the course of her life, been called on to contemplate, near at hand and for a long time, the terrible effects of talents misused and faculties abused, hers was naturally a sensitive, reserved, and dejected nature, what she saw sank deeply into her mind, it did her harm. She brooded over it till she believed it to be a duty to reproduce every detail (of course with fictitious characters, incidents, and situations) as a warning to others. She hated her work, but would pursue it. When reasoned with on the subject, she regarded such reasonings as a temptation to self-indulgence. She must be honest, she must not varnish, soften, or conceal. This well-meant resolution brought on her misconstruction and some abuse, which she bore, as it was her custom to bear whatever was unpleasant, with mild, steady patience. She was a very sincere and practical Christian, but the tinge of religious melancholy communicated a sad shade to her brief, blameless life.

Neither Ellis nor Acton allowed herself for one moment to sink under want of encouragement, energy nerved the one, and endurance upheld the other. They were both prepared to try again, I would fain think that hope and the sense of power was yet strong within them. But a great change approached. Affliction came in that shape which to anticipate is dread, to look back on, grief. In the very heat and burden of the day, the labourers failed over their work.

My sister Emily first declined. The details of her illness are deep-branded in my memory, but to dwell on them, either in thought or narrative, is not in my power. Never in all her life had she lingered over any task that lay before her, and she did not linger now. She sank rapidly. She made haste to leave us. Yet, while physically she perished, mentally, she grew stronger than we had yet known her. Day by day, when I saw with what a front she met suffering, I looked on her with an anguish of wonder and love. I have seen nothing like it, but, indeed, I have never seen her parallel in anything. Stronger than a man, simpler than a child, her nature stood alone. The awful point was, that, while full of ruth for others, on herself she had no pity, the spirit was inexorable to the flesh, from the trembling hand, the unnerved limbs, the faded eyes, the same service was exacted as they had rendered in health To stand by and witness this, and not dare to remonstrate, was a pain no words can render

Two cruel months of hope and fear passed painfully by, and the day came at last when the terrors and pains of death were to be undergone by this treasure, which had grown dearer and dearer to our hearts as it wasted before our eyes Towards the decline of that day, we had nothing of Emily but her mortal remains as consumption left them She died December 19, 1848

We thought this enough, but we were utterly and presumptuously wrong She was not buried ere Anne fell ill She had not been committed to the grave a fortnight, before we received distinct intimation that it was necessary to prepare our minds to see the younger sister go after the elder Accordingly, she followed in the same path with slower step, and with a patience that equalled the other's fortitude I have said that she was religious, and it was by leaning on those Christian doctrines in which she firmly believed, that she found support through her most painful journey I witnessed their efficacy in her latest hour and greatest trial, and must bear my testimony to the calm triumph with which they brought her through She died May 28, 1849

What more shall I say about them? I cannot and need not say much more In externals, they were two unobtrusive women, a perfectly secluded life gave them retiring manners and habits In Emily's nature the extremes of vigour and simplicity seemed to meet Under an unsophisticated culture, inartificial tastes, and an unpretending outside, lay a secret power and fire that might have informed the brain and kindled the veins of a hero, but she had no worldly wisdom, her powers were unadapted to the practical business of life, she would fail to defend her most manifest rights, to consult her most legitimate advantage An interpreter ought always to have stood between her and the world Her will was not very flexible, and it generally opposed her interest Her temper was magnanimous, but warm and sudden, her spirit altogether unbending

Anne's character was milder and more subdued, she wanted the power, the fire, the originality of her sister, but was well-endowed with quiet virtues of her own Long-suffering, self-denying, reflective, and intelligent, a constitutional reserve and taciturnity placed and kept her in the shade, and covered her mind, and especially her feelings, with a sort of nun-like veil, which was rarely lifted Neither Emily nor Anne was learned, they had no thought of filling their pitchers at the well-spring of other minds, they always wrote from the impulse of nature, the dictates of intuition, and from such stores of observation as their limited experience had enabled them to amass I may sum up all by saying, that for strangers they were nothing, for superficial observers less than nothing, but for those who had known them all their lives in the intimacy of close relationship, they were genuinely good and truly great

This notice has been written, because I felt it a sacred duty to wipe the dust off their gravestones, and leave their dear names free from soil

CURRER BELL

September 19, 1850

EDITOR'S PREFACE

TO THE NEW EDITION OF

WUTHERING HEIGHTS

---

I HAVE just read over Wuthering Heights and, for the first time, have obtained a clear glimpse of what are termed (and, perhaps, really are) its faults, have gained a definite notion of how it appears to other people—to strangers who knew nothing of the author, who are unacquainted with the locality where the scenes of the story are laid, to whom the inhabitants, the customs, the natural characteristics of the outlying hills and hamlets in the West-Riding of Yorkshire are things alien and unfamiliar

To all such Wuthering Heights must appear a rude and strange production. The wild moors of the north of England can for them have no interest, the language, the manners, the very dwellings and household customs of the scattered inhabitants of those districts, must be to such readers in a great measure unintelligible, and—where intelligible—repulsive. Men and women who, perhaps, naturally very calm, and with feelings moderate in degree, and little marked in kind, have been trained from their cradle to observe the utmost evenness of manner and guardedness of language, will hardly know what to make of the rough, strong utterance, the harshly manifested passions, the unbridled aversions, and headlong partialities of unlettered moorland hinds and rugged moorland squires, who have grown up untaught and unchecked, except by mentors as harsh as themselves. A large class of readers, likewise, will suffer greatly from the introduction into the pages of this work of words printed with all their letters, which it has become the custom to represent by the initial and final letter only—a blank line filling the interval. I may as well say at once that, for this circumstance, it is out of my power to apologize, deeming it, myself, a rational plan to write words at full length. The practice of hinting by single letters those expletives with which profane and violent persons are wont to garnish their discourse, strikes me as a proceeding which, however well meant, is weak and futile. I cannot tell what good it does—what feeling it spares—what horror it conceals.

With regard to the rusticity of Wuthering Heights I admit the charge, for I feel the quality. It is rustic all through. It is moorish, and wild, and knotty as a root of heath. Nor was it natural that it should be otherwise, the author being herself a native and nursing of the moors. Doubtless, had her lot been cast in a town, her writings, if she had written at all, would have possessed another character. Even had chance or taste led her to choose a similar subject, she would have treated it otherwise. Had Ellis Bell been a lady or a gentleman accustomed to what is called "the world," her view of a remote and unreclaimed region, as well as of the dwellers therein, would have differed greatly from that actually taken by the homebred country girl. Doubtless it would have been wider—more comprehensive—whether it would have been more original or more truthful is not so certain. As far as the scenery and locality are concerned, it could scarcely have been so sympathetic. Ellis Bell did not describe as one whose eye and taste alone found pleasure in the prospect, her native hills were far more to her than a spectacle, they were what she lived in, and by, as much as the wild birds, their tenants, or as the heather, their produce. Her descriptions, then, of natural scenery, are what they should be, and all they should be.

Where delineation of human character is concerned, the case is different. I am bound to avow that she had scarcely more practical knowledge of the peasantry amongst whom she lived, than a nun has of the country people who sometimes pass her convent gates. My sister's disposition was not naturally gregarious, circumstances favoured and fostered her tendency to seclusion, except to go to church or take a walk on the hills, she rarely crossed the threshold of home. Though her feeling for the people round was benevolent, intercourse with them she never sought, nor, with very few exceptions, ever experienced. And yet she knew them—knew their ways, their language, their family histories, she could hear of them with interest, and talk of them with detail, minute, graphic, and accurate, but with them, she rarely exchanged a word. Hence it ensued that what her mind had gathered of the real concerning them, was too exclusively confined to those tragic and terrible traits of which, in listening to the secret annals of every rude vicinage, the memory is sometimes compelled to receive the impress. Her imagination, which was a spirit more sombre than sunny, more powerful than sportive, found in such traits material whence it wrought creations like Heathcliff, like Earnshaw, like Catherine. Having formed these beings, she did not know what she had done. If the auditor of her work when read in manuscript, shuddered under the grinding influence of natures so relentless and implacable, of spirits so lost and fallen, if it was complained that the mere hearing of certain vivid and fearful scenes banished sleep by night, and disturbed mental peace by day, Ellis Bell would wonder what was meant, and suspect the complainant of affectation. Had she but lived, her mind would of itself have grown like a strong tree, loftier, straighter, wider-spreading, and its matured fruits would have attained a mellow ripeness and sunnier bloom, but on that mind time and experience alone could work to the influence of other intellects, it was not amenable.

Having avowed that over much of Wuthering Heights there broods "a horror of great darkness", that, in its storm-heated and electrical atmosphere, we seem at times to breathe lightning, let me point to those spots where clouded daylight and the eclipsed sun still attest their existence. For a specimen of true benevolence and homely fidelity, look at the character of Nelly Dean, for an example of constancy and tenderness, remark that of Edgar Linton. (Some people will think these qualities do not shine so well incarnate in a man as they would do in a woman, but Ellis Bell could never be brought to comprehend this notion: nothing moved her more than any insinuation that the faithfulness and clemency, the long-suffering and loving-kindness which are esteemed virtues in the daughters of Eve, become foibles in the sons of Adam. She held that mercy and forgiveness are the divinest attributes of the Great Being who made both man and woman, and that what clothes the Godhead in glory, can disgrace no form of feeble humanity.) There is a dry saturnine humour in the delineation of old Joseph, and some glimpses of grace and gaiety animate the younger Catherine. Nor is even the first heroine of the name destitute of a certain strange beauty in her fierceness, or of honesty in the midst of perverted passion and passionate perversity.

Heathcliff, indeed, stands unredeemed, never once swerving in his arrow-straight course to perdition, from the time when "the little black-haired, swarthy thing, as dark as if it came from the Devil," was first unrolled out of the bundle and set on its feet in the farm-house kitchen, to the hour when Nelly Dean found the grim, stalwart corpse laid on its back in the panel-enclosed bed, with wide-gazing eyes that seemed "to sneer at her attempt to close them, and parted lips and sharp white teeth that sneered too."

Heathcliff betrays one solitary human feeling, and that is not his love for Catherine, which is a sentiment fierce and inhuman—a passion such as might boil and glow in the bad essence of some evil genius, a fire that might form the tormented centre—the ever-suffering soul of a magnate of the infernal world—and by its quenchless and ceaseless ravage effect the execution of the decree which dooms him to carry Hell with him wherever he wanders. No, the single link that connects Heathcliff with humanity is his rudely confessed regard for Hareton Earnshaw—the young man whom he has ruined, and then his half-implied esteem for Nelly Dean. These solitary traits omitted, we should say he was child neither of Lascar nor gipsy, but a man's shape animated by demon life—a Ghoul—an Afreet.

Whether it is right or advisable to create beings like Heathcliff, I do not know. I scarcely think it is. But this I know, the writer who possesses the creative gift owns something of which he is not always master—something that at times strangely wills and works for itself. He may lay down rules and devise principles, and to rules and principles it will perhaps for years lie in subjection, and then, haply without any warning of revolt, there comes a time when it will no longer consent to "harrow the vallies, or be bound with a band in the furrow"—when it "laughs at the multitude of the city, and regards not the crying of the driver"—when, refusing absolutely to make ropes out of sea-sand any longer, it sets to work on statue-hewing, and you have a Pluto or a Jove, a Tisiphone or a Psyche, a Mermaid or a Madonna, as Fate or Inspiration direct. Be the work grim or glorious, dread or divine, you have little choice left but quiescent adoption. As for you—the nominal artist—your share in it has been to work passively under dictates you neither delivered nor could question—that would not be uttered at your prayer, nor suppressed nor changed at your caprice. If the result be attractive, the World will praise you, who little deserve praise, if it be repulsive, the same World will blame you, who almost as little deserve blame.

Wuthering Heights was hewn in a wild workshop, with simple tools, out of homely materials. The statuary found a granite block on a solitary moor; gazing thereon, he saw how from the crag might be elicited a head, savage, swart, sinister, a form moulded with at least one element of grandeur—power. He wrought with a rude chisel, and from no model but the vision of his meditations. With time and labour, the crag took human shape, and there it stands colossal, dark, and frowning, half statue, half rock, in the former sense, terrible and goblin-like, in the latter, almost beautiful, for its colouring is of mellow grey, and moorland moss clothes it, and heath, with its blooming bells and balmy fragrance, grows faithfully close to the giant's foot.

CURRER BELL

WUTHERING HEIGHTS

---

CHAPTER I

---

1801—I have just returned from a visit to my landlord—the solitary neighbour that I shall be troubled with. This is certainly, a beautiful country! In all England, I do not believe that I could have fixed on a situation so completely removed from the stir of society. A perfect misanthropist's Heaven—and Mr Heathcliff and I are such a suitable pair to divide the desolation between us. A capital fellow! He little imagined how my heart warmed towards him when I beheld his black eyes withdraw so suspiciously under their brows, as I rode up, and when his fingers sheltered themselves, with a jealous resolution still further in his waistcoat, as I announced my name.

"Mr Heathcliff?" I said.

A nod was the answer.

"Mr Lockwood your new tenant, sir. I do myself the honour of calling as soon as possible, after my arrival, to express the hope that I have not inconvenienced you by my perseverance in soliciting the occupation of Thrushcross Grange. I heard, yesterday, you had some thoughts——"

"Thrushcross Grange is my own, sir," he interrupted wincing, "I should not allow any one to inconvenience me, if I could hinder it—walk in!"

The "walk in," was uttered with closed teeth and expressed the sentiment, "Go to the Deuce!" even the gate over which he leant manifested no sympathizing movement to the words, and I think that circumstance determined me to accept the invitation. I felt interested in a man who seemed more exaggeratedly reserved than myself.

When he saw my horse's breast fairly pushing the barrier, he did pull out his hand to unchain it, and then sullenly preceded me up the causeway, calling, as we entered the court.

"Joseph, take Mr Lockwood's horse, and bring up some wine."

"Here we have the whole establishment of domestics, I suppose," was the reflection, suggested by this compound order, "No wonder the grass grows up between the flags, and cattle are the only hedge-cutters"

Joseph was an elderly, nay, an old man, very old, perhaps, though hale and sinewy

"The Lord help us!" he soliloquised in an undertone of peevish displeasure, while relieving me of my horse looking, meantime, in my face so sourly that I charitably conjectured he must have need of divine aid to digest his dinner, and his pious ejaculation had no reference to my unexpected advent

Wuthering Heights is the name of Mr Heathcliff's dwelling "Wuthering" being a significant provincial adjective, descriptive of the atmospheric tumult to which its station is exposed, in stormy weather Pure, bracing ventilation they must have up there, at all times, indeed one may guess the power of the north wind, blowing over the edge, by the excessive slant of a few, stunted firs at the end of the house, and by a range of gaunt thorns all stretching their limbs one way, as if craving alms of the sun Happily, the architect had foresight to build it strong the narrow windows are deeply set in the wall, and the corners defended with large jutting stones

Before passing the threshold, I paused to admire a quantity of grotesque carving lavished over the front, and especially about the principal door, above which, among a wilderness of crumbling griffins, and shameless little boys, I detected the date "1500," and the name "Hareton Earnshaw" I would have made a few comments, and requested a short history of the place, from the surly owner, but his attitude at the door appeared to demand my speedy entrance, or complete departure, and I had no desire to aggravate his impatience, previous to inspecting the penetralium

One step brought us into the family sitting-room, without any introductory lobby, or passage they call it here "the house" preeminently It includes kitchen, and parlour, generally, but I believe at Wuthering Heights, the kitchen is forced to retreat altogether, into another quarter, at least I distinguished a chatter of tongues, and a clatter of culinary utensils, deep within, and I observed no signs of roasting, boiling, or baking, about the huge fire-place, nor any glitter of copper saucepans and tin cullenders on the walls One end, indeed, reflected splendidly both light and heat, from ranks of immense pewter dishes, interspersed with silver jugs, and tankards, towering row after row, in a vast oak dresser, to the very roof. The latter had never been underdrawn, its entire anatomy lay bare to an inquiring eye, except where a frame of wood laden with oatcakes, and clusters of legs of beef, mutton and ham, concealed it. Above the chimney were sundry villainous old guns, and a couple of horse-pistols, and, by way of ornament, three gaudily painted canisters disposed along its ledge. The floor was of smooth, white stone. The chairs, high-backed, primitive structures, painted green, one or two heavy black ones lurking in the shade. In an arch, under the dresser, reposed a huge, liver-coloured bitch pointer surrounded by a swarm of squealing puppies, and other dogs, haunted other recesses.

The apartment, and furniture would have been nothing extraordinary as belonging to a homely, northern farmer with a stubborn countenance, and stalwart limbs, set out to advantage in knee-breeches, and gaiters. Such an individual, seated in his arm-chair, his mug of ale frothing on the round table before him, is to be seen in any circuit of five or six miles among these hills, if you go at the right time, after dinner. But, Mr Heathcliff forms a singular contrast to his abode and style of living. He is a dark skinned gipsy, in aspect, in dress, and manners, a gentleman, that is, as much a gentleman as many a country squire, rather slovenly, perhaps, yet not looking amiss, with his negligence, because he has an erect and handsome figure—and rather morose—possibly, some people might suspect him of a degree of under-bred pride—I have a sympathetic chord within that tells me it is nothing of the sort, I know, by instinct, his reserve springs from an aversion to showy displays of feeling—to manifestations of mutual kindness. He'll love and hate, equally under cover, and esteem it a species of impertinence, to be loved or hated again—No, I'm running on too fast—I bestow my own attributes over liberally on him. Mr Heathcliff may have entirely dissimilar reasons for keeping his hand out of the way, when he meets a would be acquaintance, to those which actuate me. Let me hope my constitution is almost peculiar. My dear mother used to say I should never have a comfortable home, and only last summer, I proved myself perfectly unworthy of one.

While enjoying a month of fine weather at the sea-coast, I was thrown into the company of a most fascinating creature, a real goddess, in my eyes, as long as she took no notice of me.

I "never told my love" vocally, still, if looks have language, the merest idiot might have guessed I was over head and ears, she understood me, at last, and looked a return—the sweetest of all imaginable looks—and what did I do? I confess it with shame—shrunk icily into myself, like a snail, at every glance retired colder and farther, till, finally, the poor innocent was led to doubt her own senses, and, overwhelmed with confusion at her supposed mistake, persuaded her mamma to decamp

By this curious turn of disposition I have gained the reputation of deliberate heartlessness, how undeserved, I alone can appreciate

I took a seat at the end of the hearthstone opposite that towards which my landlord advanced, and filled up an interval of silence by attempting to caress the canine mother, who had left her nursery, and was sneaking wolfishly to the back of my legs, her lip curled up, and her white teeth watering for a snatch

My caress provoked a long, guttural gnarl

"You'd better let the dog alone," growled Mr Heathcliff, in unison, checking fiercer demonstrations with a punch of his foot "She's not accustomed to be spoiled—not kept for a pet"

Then, striding to a side-door, he shouted again

"Joseph!"

Joseph mumbled indistinctly in the depths of the cellar, but, gave no intimation of ascending, so, his master dived down to him, leaving me vis-à-vis the ruffianly bitch, and a pair of grim, shaggy sheep-dogs, who shared with her a jealous guardianship over all my movements

Not anxious to come in contact with their fangs, I sat still—but, imagining they would scarcely understand tacit insults, I unfortunately indulged in winking and making faces at the trio, and some turn of my physiognomy so irritated madam, that she suddenly broke into a fury, and leapt on my knees I flung her back, and hastened to interpose the table between us This proceeding roused the whole hive Half-a-dozen four-footed fiends, of various sizes and ages, issued from hidden dens to the common centre I felt my heels, and coat-laps peculiar subjects of assault, and, parrying off the larger combatants, as effectually as I could, with the poker, I was constrained to demand, aloud, assistance from some of the household, in re-establishing peace

Mr Heathcliff and his man climbed the cellar steps with vexatious phlegm I don't think they moved one second faster than usual, though the hearth was an absolute tempest of worrying and yelping

Happily, an inhabitant of the kitchen made more dispatch, a lusty dame, with tucked up gown, bare arms, and fire-flushed cheeks, rushed into the midst of us flourishing a fryingpan, and used that weapon, and her tongue to such purpose, that the storm subsided magically, and she only remained, heaving like a sea after a high wind, when her master entered on the scene

"What the devil is the matter?" he asked, eyeing me in a manner that I could ill endure after this inhospitable treatment

"What the devil, indeed!" I muttered "The herd of possessed swine could have had no worse spirits in them than those animals of yours, sir You might as well leave a stranger with a brood of tigers!"

"They won't meddle with persons who touch nothing," he remarked, putting the bottle before me, and restoring the displaced table "The dogs do right to be vigilant Take a glass of wine."

"No, thank you "

"Not bitten, are you?"

"If I had been, I would have set my signet on the biter"

Heathcliff's countenance relaxed into a grin

"Come, come," he said, "you are flurried, Mr Lockwood Here, take a little wine Guests are so exceedingly rare in this house that I and my dogs, I am willing to own, hardly know how to receive them Your health, sir "

I bowed and returned the pledge, beginning to perceive that it would be foolish to sit sulking for the misbehaviour of a pack of curs besides, I felt loth to yield the fellow further amusement, at my expense, since his humour took that turn

He—probably swayed by prudential considerations of the folly of offending a good tenant—relaxed, a little, in the laconic style of chipping off his pronouns, and auxiliary verbs, and introduced, what he supposed would be a subject of interest to me, a discourse on the advantages and disadvantages of my present place of retirement

I found him very intelligent on the topics we touched, and, before I went home, I was encouraged so far as to volunteer another visit, to-morrow

He evidently wished no repetition of my intrusion I shall go, notwithstanding It is astonishing how sociable I feel myself compared with him

---

CHAPTER II

---

YESTERDAY AFTERNOON set in misty and cold I had half a mind to spend it by my study fire, instead of wading through heath and mud to Wuthering Heights

On coming up from dinner, however, (NB I dine between twelve and one o'clock, the housekeeper, a matronly lady taken as a fixture along with the house, could not, or would not comprehend my request that I might be served at five ) On mounting the stairs with this lazy intention, and stepping into the room, I saw a servant-girl on her knees, surrounded by brushes, and coal-scuttles, and raising an infernal dust as she extinguished the flames with heaps of cinders This spectacle drove me back immediately, I took my hat, and, after a four miles' walk, arrived at Heathcliff's garden gate just in time to escape the first feathery flakes of a snow shower

On that bleak hill top the earth was hard with a black frost, and the air made me shiver through every limb Being unable to remove the chain, I jumped over, and, running up the flagged causeway bordered with straggling gooseberry bushes, knocked vainly for admittance, till my knuckles tingled, and the dogs howled

"Wretched inmates!" I ejaculated, mentally, "you deserve perpetual isolation from your species for your churlish inhospitality At least, I would not keep my doors barred in the day time—I don't care—I will get in!"

So resolved, I grasped the latch, and shook it vehemently Vinegar-faced Joseph projected his head from a round window of the barn

"Whet are ye for?" he shouted "T' maister's dahn i' t' fowld Goa rahnd by th' end ut' laith, if yah went tuh spake tull him "

"Is there nobody inside to open the door?" I hallooed, responsively

"They's nobbut t' missis, and shoo'll nut oppen't an ye mak yer flaysome dins till neeght"

"Why? cannot you tell her who I am, eh, Joseph?"

"Nor-ne me! Aw'll hae noa hend wi't," muttered the head vanishing

The snow began to drive thickly I seized the handle to essay another trial, when a young man, without coat, and shouldering a pitchfork, appeared in the yard behind He hailed me to follow him, and, after marching through a washhouse, and a paved area containing a coal-shed, pump, and pigeon cote, we at length arrived in the large, warm, cheerful apartment, where I was formerly received

It glowed delightfully in the radiance of an immense fire, compounded of coal, peat, and wood and near the table, laid for a plentiful evening meal, I was pleased to observe the "missis," an individual whose existence I had never previously suspected

I bowed and waited, thinking she would bid me take a seat She looked at me, leaning back in her chair, and remained motionless and mute

"Rough weather!" I remarked "I'm afraid, Mrs Heathcliff, the door must bear the consequence of your servants' leisure attendance I had hard work to make them hear me!"

She never opened her mouth I stared—she stared also At any rate, she kept her eyes on me, in a cool, regardless manner, exceedingly embarrassing and disagreeable

"Sit down," said the young man, gruffly "He'll be in soon"

I obeyed, and hemmed, and called the villain Juno, who deigned, at this second interview, to move the extreme tip of her tail, in token of owning my acquaintance

"A beautiful animal!" I commenced again "Do you intend parting with the little ones, madam?"

"They are not mine," said the amiable hostess more repellingly than Heathcliff himself could have replied

"Ah, your favourites are among these!" I continued, turning to an obscure cushion full of something like cats

"A strange choice of favourites," she observed scornfully

Unluckily, it was a heap of dead rabbits—I hemmed once more, and drew closer to the hearth, repeating my comment on the wildness of the evening

"You should not have come out," she said, rising and reaching from the chimney piece two of the painted canisters

Her position before was sheltered from the light now, I had a distinct view of her whole figure and countenance. She was slender, and apparently scarcely past girlhood: an admirable form, and the most exquisite little face that I have ever had the pleasure of beholding: small features, very fair, flaxen ringlets, or rather golden, hanging loose on her delicate neck, and eyes—had they been agreeable in expression, they would have been irresistible—fortunately for my susceptible heart, the only sentiment they evinced hovered between scorn and a kind of desperation, singularly unnatural to be detected there.

The canisters were almost out of her reach, I made a motion to aid her, she turned upon me as a miser might turn, if anyone attempted to assist him in counting his gold.

"I don't want your help," she snapped, "I can get them for myself."

"I beg your pardon," I hastened to reply.

"Were you asked to tea?" she demanded, tying an apron over her neat black frock, and standing with a spoonful of the leaf poised over the pot.

"I shall be glad to have a cup," I answered.

"Were you asked?" she repeated.

"No," I said, half smiling, "You are the proper person to ask me."

She flung the tea back, spoon and all, and resumed her chair in a pet, her forehead corrugated, and her red under-lip pushed out, like a child's, ready to cry.

Meanwhile, the young man had slung onto his person a decidedly shabby upper garment, and, erecting himself before the blaze, looked down on me, from the corner of his eyes, for all the world as if there were some mortal feud unavenged between us. I began to doubt whether he were a servant or not, his dress and speech were both rude, entirely devoid of the superiority observable in Mr and Mrs Heathcliff, his thick, brown curls were rough and uncultivated, his whiskers encroached bearishly over his cheeks, and his hands were embrowned like those of a common labourer: still his bearing was free, almost haughty, and he showed none of a domestic's assiduity in attending on the lady of the house.

In the absence of clear proofs of his condition, I deemed it best to abstain from noticing his curious conduct, and, five minutes afterwards, the entrance of Heathcliff relieved me, in some measure, from my uncomfortable state.

"You see, sir, I am come, according to promise!" I exclaimed, assuming the cheerful "and I fear I shall be weather-bound for half an hour, if you can afford me shelter during that space"

"Half an hour?" he said, shaking the white flakes from his clothes, "I wonder you should select the thick of a snow-storm to ramble about in. Do you know that you run a risk of being lost in the marshes? People familiar with these moors often miss their road on such evenings, and, I can tell you, there is no chance of a change at present"

"Perhaps I can get a guide among your lads, and he might stay at the Grange till morning—could you spare me one?"

"No, I could not"

"Oh, indeed! Well then, I must trust to my own sagacity"

"Umph!"

"Are you going to make th' tea?" demanded he of the shabby coat, shifting his ferocious gaze from me to the young lady

"Is he to have any?" she asked, appealing to Heathcliff

"Get it ready, will you?" was the answer, uttered so savagely that I started. The tone in which the words were said, revealed a genuine bad nature. I no longer felt inclined to call Heathcliff a capital fellow

When the preparations were finished, he invited me with—

"Now, sir, bring forward your chair" And we all, including the rustic youth, drew round the table, an austere silence prevailing while we discussed our meal

I thought, if I had caused the cloud, it was my duty to make an effort to dispel it. They could not every day sit so grim and taciturn, and it was impossible, however ill-tempered they might be, that the universal scowl they wore was their every day countenance

"It is strange," I began in the interval of swallowing one cup of tea, and receiving another, "it is strange how custom can mould our tastes and ideas, many could not imagine the existence of happiness in a life of such complete exile from the world as you spend, Mr Heathcliff, yet, I'll venture to say, that, surrounded by your family, and with your amiable lady as the presiding genius over your home and heart——"

"My amiable lady!" he interrupted, with an almost diabolical sneer on his face "Where is she—my amiable lady?"

"Mrs Heathcliff, your wife, I mean"

"Well, yes—Oh! you would intimate that her spirit has taken the post of ministering angel, and guards the fortunes of Wuthering Heights, even when her body is gone Is that it?"

Perceiving myself in a blunder, I attempted to correct it I might have seen there was too great a disparity between the ages of the parties to make it likely that they were man and wife One was about forty, a period of mental vigour at which men seldom cherish the delusion of being married for love, by girls that dream is reserved for the solace of our declining years The other did not look seventeen

Then it flashed upon me, "the clown at my elbow, who is drinking his tea out of a basin, and eating his bread with unwashed hands, may be her husband Heathcliff, junior, of course Here is the consequence of being buried alive she has thrown herself away upon that boor, from sheer ignorance that better individuals existed! A sad pity—I must beware how I cause her to regret her choice"

The last reflection may seem conceited, it was not My neighbour struck me as bordering on repulsive I knew, through experience, that I was tolerably attractive

"Mrs Heathcliff is my daughter-in-law," said Heathcliff, corroborating my surmise He turned, as he spoke, a peculiar look in her direction, a look of hatred unless he has a most perverse set of facial muscles that will not, like those of other people, interpret the language of his soul

"Ah, certainly—I see now, you are the favoured possessor of the beneficent fairy," I remarked, turning to my neighbour

This was worse than before the youth grew crimson, and clenched his fist, with every appearance of a meditated assault But he seemed to recollect himself, presently, and smothered the storm in a brutal curse, muttered on my behalf, which, however, I took care not to notice

"Unhappy in your conjectures, sir!" observed my host, "we neither of us have the privilege of owning your good fairy, her mate is dead I said she was my daughter-in-law, therefore, she must have married my son"

"And this young man is——"

"Not my son, assuredly!"

Heathcliff smiled again, as if it were rather too bold a jest to attribute the paternity of that bear to him

"My name is Hareton Earnshaw," growled the other, "and I'd counsel you to respect it!"

"I've shown no disrespect," was my reply, laughing internally at the dignity with which he announced himself

He fixed his eye on me longer than I cared to return the stare, for fear I might be tempted either to box his ears, or render my hilarity audible I began to feel unmistakably out of place in that pleasant family circle The dismal spiritual atmosphere overcame, and more than neutralized the glowing physical comforts round me, and I resolved to be cautious how I ventured under those rafters a third time

The business of eating being concluded, and no one uttering a word of sociable conversation, I approached a window to examine the weather

A sorrowful sight I saw, dark night coming down prematurely, and sky and hills mingled in one bitter whirl of wind and suffocating snow

"I don't think it possible for me to get home now, without a guide," I could not help exclaiming "The roads will be buried already, and, if they were bare, I could scarcely distinguish a foot in advance"

"Hareton, drive those dozen sheep into the barn porch They'll be covered if left in the fold all night, and put a plank before them," said Heathcliff

"How must I do?" I continued, with rising irritation

There was no reply to my question, and, on looking round, I saw only Joseph bringing in a pail of porridge for the dogs, and Mrs Heathcliff, leaning over the fire, diverting herself with burning a bundle of matches which had fallen from the chimney-piece as she restored the tea-canister to its place

The former, when he had deposited his burden, took a critical survey of the room, and, in cracked tones, grated out

"Aw woonder hagh yah can faishon tuh stand thear i' idleness un war, when all on 'em's goan aght! Bud yah're a nowt, and it's noa use talking—yah'll niver mend uh yer ill ways, bud, goa raught tuh t' devil, like yer mother afore ye!"

I imagined, for a moment, that this piece of eloquence was addressed to me, and, sufficiently enraged, stepped towards the aged rascal with an intention of kicking him out of the door

Mrs Heathcliff, however, checked me by her answer

"You scandalous old hypocrite!" she replied "Are you not afraid of being carried away bodily, whenever you mention the devil's name? I warn you to refrain from provoking me, or I'll ask your abduction as a special favour Stop, look here, Joseph," she continued, taking a long, dark book from a shelf "I'll show you how far I've progressed in the Black Art—I shall soon be competent to make a clear house of it The red cow didn't die by chance, and your rheumatism can hardly be reckoned among providential visitations!"

"Oh, wicked, wicked!" gasped the elder, "may the Lord deliver us from evil!"

"No, reprobate! you are a castaway—be off, or I'll hurt you seriously! I'll have you all modelled in wax and clay, and the first who passes the limits, I fix, shall—I'll not say what he shall be done to—but, you'll see! Go, I'm looking at you!"

The little witch put a mock malignity into her beautiful eyes, and Joseph, trembling with sincere horror, hurried out praying and ejaculating "wicked" as he went

I thought her conduct must be prompted by a species of dreary fun, and, now that we were alone, I endeavoured to interest her in my distress

"Mrs Heathcliff," I said earnestly, "you must excuse me for troubling you—I presume, because, with that face, I'm sure you cannot help being good-hearted Do point out some landmarks by which I may know my way home—I have no more idea how to get there than you would have how to get to London!"

"Take the road you came," she answered, ensconcing herself in a chair, with a candle, and the long book open before her "It is brief advice, but, as sound as I can give"

"Then, if you hear of me being discovered dead in a bog, or a pit full of snow, your conscience won't whisper that it is partly your fault?"

"How so? I cannot escort you They wouldn't let me go to the end of the garden-wall"

"You! I should be sorry to ask you to cross the threshold, for my convenience, on such a night," I cried "I want you to tell me the way, not to show it, or else to persuade Mr Heathcliff to give me a guide"

"Who? There is himself, Earnshaw, Zillah, Joseph, and I Which would you have?"

"Are there no boys at the farm?"

"No, those are all"

"Then, it follows that I am compelled to stay"

"That you may settle with your host I have nothing to do with it"

"I hope it will be a lesson to you, to make no more rash journeys on these hills," cried Heathcliff's stern voice from the kitchen entrance "As to staying here, I don't keep accommodations for visitors, you must share a bed with Hareton, or Joseph, if you do "

"I can sleep on a chair in this room," I replied

"No, no! A stranger is a stranger, be he rich or poor—it will not suit me to permit any one the range of the place while I am off guard!" said the unmannerly wretch

With this insult my patience was at an end I uttered an expression of disgust, and pushed past him into the yard, running against Earnshaw in my haste It was so dark that I could not see the means of exit, and, as I wandered round, I heard another specimen of their civil behaviour amongst each other

At first, the young man appeared about to befriend me

"I'll go with him as far as the park," he said

"You'll go with him to hell!" exclaimed his master, or whatever relation he bore "And who is to look after the horses, eh?"

"A man's life is of more consequence than one evening's neglect of the horses, somebody must go," murmured Mrs Heathcliff, more kindly than I expected

"Not at your command!" retorted Hareton "If you set store on him, you'd better be quiet "

"Then I hope his ghost will haunt you, and I hope Mr Heathcliff will never get another tenant, till the Grange is a ruin!" she answered sharply

"Hearken, hearken, shoo's cursing on em!" muttered Joseph, towards whom I had been steering

He sat within earshot, milking the cows, by the light of a lantern which I seized unceremoniously, and calling out that I would send it back on the morrow, rushed to the nearest postern

"Maister, maister, he's staling t' lantern!" shouted the ancient, pursuing my retreat "Hey, Gnasher! Hey, dog! Hey, Wolf holld him, holld him!"

On opening the little door, two hairy monsters flew at my throat, bearing me down, and extinguishing the light, while a mingled guffaw, from Heathcliff and Hareton, put the copestone on my rage and humiliation

Fortunately, the beasts seemed more bent on stretching their paws and yawning, and flourishing their tails, than devouring me alive, but, they would suffer no resurrection, and I was forced to lie till their malignant masters pleased to deliver me then hat-

less, and trembling with wrath, I ordered the miscreants to let me out—on their peril to keep me one minute longer—with several incoherent threats of retaliation, that in their indefinite depth of virulency, smacked of King Lear

The vehemence of my agitation brought on a copious bleeding at the nose, and still Heathcliff laughed, and still I scolded I don't know what would have concluded the scene had there not been one person at hand rather more rational than myself, and more benevolent than my entertainer This was Zillah, the stout housewife, who at length issued forth to inquire into the nature of the uproar She thought that some of them had been laying violent hands on me, and, not daring to attack her master, she turned her vocal artillery against the younger scoundrel

"Well, Mr Earnshaw," she cried, "I wonder what you'll have agait next! Are we going to murder folk on our very door-stones? I see this house will never do for me—look at t' poor lad, he's fair choking! Wisht, wisht! you mun'n't go on so—come in, and I'll cure that There now, hold ye still"

With these words she suddenly splashed a pint of icy water down my neck, and pulled me into the kitchen Mr Heathcliff followed, his accidental merriment expiring quickly in his habitual moroseness

I was sick exceedingly, and dizzy and faint, and thus compelled, perforce, to accept lodgings under his roof He told Zillah to give me a glass of brandy, and then passed on to the inner room, while she condoled with me on my sorry predicament, and having obeyed his orders, whereby I was somewhat revived, ushered me to bed

---

CHAPTER III

---

WHILE LEADING the way up-stairs, she recommended that I should hide the candle, and not make a noise, for her master had an odd notion about the chamber she would put me in, and never let anybody lodge there willingly

I asked the reason

She did not know, she answered, she had only lived there a year or two, and they had so many queer goings on, she could not begin to be curious

Too stupidified to be curious myself, I fastened my door and glanced round for the bed. The whole furniture consisted of a chair, a clothes-press, and a large oak case, with squares cut out near the top, resembling coach windows

Having approached this structure, I looked inside, and perceived it to be a singular sort of old-fashioned couch, very conveniently designed to obviate the necessity for every member of the family having a room to himself. In fact, it formed a little closet, and the ledge of a window, which it enclosed, served as a table

I slid back the panelled sides, got in with my light, pulled them together again, and felt secure against the vigilance of Heathcliff, and every one else

The ledge, where I placed my candle, had a few mildewed books piled up in one corner, and it was covered with writing scratched on the paint. This writing, however, was nothing but a name repeated in all kinds of characters, large and small—Catherine Earnshaw, here and there varied to Catherine Heathcliff, and then again to Catherine Linton

In rapid listlessness I leant my head against the window, and continued spelling over Catherine Earnshaw—Heathcliff—Linton, till my eyes closed, but they had not rested five minutes when a glare of white letters started from the dark, as vivid as spectres—the air swarmed with Catherines, and rousing myself to dispel the obtrusive name, I discovered my candle wick reclining on one of the antique volumes, and perfuming the place with an odour of roasted calf-skin

I snuffed it off, and, very ill at ease, under the influence of cold and lingering nausea, sat up, and spread open the injured tome on my knee. It was a Testament, in lean type, and smelling dreadfully musty: a fly-leaf bore the inscription—“Catherine Earnshaw, her book,” and a date some quarter of a century back

I shut it, and took up another, and another, till I had examined all Catherine's library: was select, and its state of dilapidation proved it to have been well used, though not altogether for a legitimate purpose, scarcely one chapter had escaped a pen and ink commentary, at least, the appearance of one, covering every morsel of blank that the printer had left

Some were detached sentences, other parts took the form of a regular diary, scrawled in an unformed, childish hand. At the top of an extra page, quite a treasure probably when first lighted on, I was greatly amused to behold an excellent caricature of my friend Joseph, rudely yet powerfully sketched.

An immediate interest kindled within me for the unknown Catherine, and I began, forthwith, to decypher her faded hieroglyphics.

"An awful Sunday!" commenced the paragraph beneath. "I wish my father were back again. Hindley is a detestable substitute—his conduct to Heathcliff is atrocious—H and I are going to rebel—we took our initiatory step this evening.

"All day had been flooding with rain, we could not go to church, so Joseph must needs get up a congregation in the garret, and while Hindley and his wife basked down stairs before a comfortable fire, doing anything but reading their bibles, I'll answer for it, Heathcliff, myself, and the unhappy plough-boy, were commanded to take our Prayer-books, and mount—we were ranged in a row, on a sack of corn, groaning and shivering, and hoping that Joseph would shiver too, so that he might give us a short homily for his own sake. A vain idea! The service lasted precisely three hours, and yet my brother had the face to exclaim, when he saw us descending,

"'What, done already?'

"On Sunday evenings we used to be permitted to play, if we did not make much noise, now a mere titter is sufficient to send us into corners!

"'You forget you have a master here,' says the tyrant. 'I'll demolish the first who puts me out of temper! I insist on perfect sobriety and silence. Oh, boy! was that you?' Frances, darling, pull his hair as you go by, I heard him snap his fingers.'

"Frances pulled his hair heartily, and then went and seated herself on her husband's knee, and there they were, like two babies, kissing and talking nonsense by the hour—foolish palaver that we should be ashamed of.

"We made ourselves as snug as our means allowed in the arch of the dresser. I had just fastened our pinafores together, and hung them up for a curtain, when in comes Joseph, on an errand from the stables. He tears down my handy work, boxes my ears, and croaks

"'T' maister nobbut just buried, and Sabbath nut oe'ed, und

t' sahnd uh't gospel still i' yer lugs, and yah darr be laiking' shame on ye' sit ye dahn, ill childer' they's good books enough if ve'll read 'em, sit ye dahn and think uh yer sowls'

"Saying this, he compelled us so to square our positions that we might receive, from the far-off fire, a dull ray to show us the text of the lumber he thrust upon us

"I could not bear the employment I took my dingy volume by the scroop, and hurled it into the dog-kennel, vowing I hated a good book

"Heathcliff kicked his to the same place

"Then there was a hubbub'

"'Maister Hindley!' shouted our chaplain 'Maister, coom huther! Miss Cathy's riven th' back off "Th' Helmet uh Salvation," un' Heathcliff's pawsd his fit intuh t' first part uh "T' Brooad Way to Destruction!" It's fair flaysome ut yah let 'em goa on this gait Ech! th' owd man ud uh laced 'em properly—bud he's goan!"

"Hindley hurried up from his paradise on the hearth, and seizing one of us by the collar, and the other by the arm, hauled both into the back-kitchen, where, Joseph asseverated, 'owd Nick' would fetch us as sure as we were living, and, so comforted, we each sought a separate nook to await his advent

"I reached this book, and a pot of ink from a shelf, and pushed the house-door ajar to give me light, and I have got the time on with writing for twenty minutes, but my companion is impatient, and proposes that we should appropriate the dairy woman's cloak, and have a scamper on the moors, under its shelter A pleasant suggestion—and then, if the surly old man come in, he may believe his prophesy verified—we cannot be damper, or colder, in the rain than we are here"

* * * * *

I suppose Catherine fulfilled her project, for the next sentence took up another subject, she waxed lachrymose

"How little did I dream that Hindley would ever make me cry so!" she wrote "My head aches, till I cannot keep it on the pillow, and still I can't give over Poor Heathcliff! Hindley calls him a vagabond, and won't let him sit with us, noi eat with us any more, and, he says, he and I must not play together, and threatens to turn him out of the house if we break his orders

"He has been blaming our father (how dared he?) for treating

H too liberally, and swears he will reduce him to his right place——”

* * * * *

I began to nod drowsily over the dim page, my eye wandered from manuscript to print I saw a red ornamented title “Seventy Times Seven, and the First of the Seventy First A Pious Discourse delivered by the Reverend Jabes Branderham, in the Chapel of Gimmerden Sough ” And while I was, half consciously, worrying my brain to guess what Jabes Branderham would make of his subject, I sank back in bed, and fell asleep

Alas, for the effects of bad tea and bad temper! what else could it be that made me pass such a terrible night? I don’t remember another that I can at all compare with it since I was capable of suffering

I began to dream, almost before I ceased to be sensible of my locality I thought it was morning, and I had set out on my way home, with Joseph for a guide The snow lay yards deep in our road, and, as we floundered on, my companion wearied me with constant reproaches that I had not brought a pilgrim’s staff telling me that I could never get into the house without one, and boastfully flourishing a heavy-headed cudgel, which I understood to be so denominated

For a moment I considered it absurd that I should need such a weapon to gain admittance into my own residence Then, a new idea flashed across me I was not going there, we were journeying to hear the famous Jabes Branderham preach from the text—“Seventy Times Seven,” and either Joseph, the preacher, or I had committed the “First of the Seventy-First,” and were to be publicly exposed and excommunicated

We came to the chapel—I have passed it really in my walks, twice or thrice it lies in a hollow, between two hills—an elevated hollow—near a swamp, whose peaty moisture is said to answer all the purposes of embalming on the few corpses deposited there The roof has been kept whole hitherto, but, as the clergyman’s stipend is only twenty pounds per annum, and a house with two rooms, threatening speedily to determine into one, no clergyman will undertake the duties of pastor, especially, as it is currently reported that his flock would rather let him starve than increase the living by one penny from their own pockets However, in my dream, Jabes had a full and attentive congregation and he preached—good God—what a sermon! Divided into four hundred and ninety parts—each fully equal to an ordinary address from the pulpit—and each discussing a separate sin! Where he searched for them, I cannot tell, he had his private manner of interpreting the phrase, and it seemed necessary the brother should sin different sins on every occasion

They were of the most curious character—odd transgressions that I never imagined previously

Oh, how weary I grew How I writhed, and yawned, and nodded, and revived! How I pinched and pricked myself, and rubbed my eyes, and stood up, and sat down again, and nudged Joseph to inform me if he would ever have done!

I was condemned to hear all out—finally, he reached the "First of the Seventy-First" At that crisis, a sudden inspiration descended on me, I was moved to rise and denounce Jabes Branderham as the sinner of the sin that no Christian need pardon

"Sir," I exclaimed, "sitting here, within these four walls, at one stretch, I have endured and forgiven the four hundred and ninety heads of your discourse Seventy times seven times have I plucked up my hat, and been about to depart—Seventy times seven times have you preposterously forced me to resume my seat The four hundred and ninety-first is too much Fellow martyrs, have at him! Drag him down, and crush him to atoms, that the place which knows him may know him no more!"

"Thou art the Man!" cried Jabes, after a solemn pause, leaning over his cushion "Seventy times seven times didst thou gapingly contort thy visage—seventy times seven did I take counsel with my soul—Lo, this is human weakness, this also may be absolved! The First of the Seventy-First is come Brethren, execute upon him the judgment written! such honour have all His saints!"

With that concluding word, the whole assembly, exalting their pilgrim's staves, rushed round me in a body, and I, having no weapon to raise in self-defence, commenced grappling with Joseph, my nearest and most ferocious assailant, for his In the confluence of the multitude, several clubs crossed, blows, aimed at me, fell on other sconces Presently the whole chapel resounded with rappings and counter-rappings Every man's hand was against his neighbour, and Branderham, unwilling to remain idle, poured forth his zeal in a shower of loud taps on the boards of the pulpit which responded so smartly, that, at last, to my unspeakable relief, they woke me

And what was it that had suggested the tremendous tumult, what had played Jabes' part in the row? Merely, the branch of a fir-tree that touched my lattice, as the blast wailed by, and rattled its dry cones against the panes!

I listened doubtingly an instant, detected the disturber, then turned and dozed, and dreamt again, if possible, still more disagreeably than before

This time, I remembered I was lying in the oak closet, and I heard distinctly the gusty wind, and the driving of the snow, I heard also, the fir-bough repeat its teasing sound, and ascribed it to the right cause, but, it annoyed me so much, that I resolved to silence it, if possible, and, I thought, I rose and endeavoured to unhasp the casement. The hook was soldered into the staple, a circumstance observed by me, when awake, but forgotten

"I must stop it, nevertheless!" I muttered, knocking my knuckles through the glass, and stretching an arm out to seize the importunate branch instead of which, my fingers closed on the fingers of a little, ice-cold hand!

The intense horror of nightmare came over me, I tried to draw back my arm, but, the hand clung to it, and a most melancholy voice, sobbed,

"Let me in—let me in!"

"Who are you?" I asked struggling, meanwhile, to disengage myself

"Catherine Linton," it replied, shiveringly, (why did I think of Linton? I had read Earnshaw, twenty times for Linton) "I'm come home, I'd lost my way on the moor!"

As it spoke, I discerned, obscurely, a child's face looking through the window—Terror made me cruel, and, finding it useless to attempt shaking the creature off, I pulled its wrist on to the broken pane, and rubbed it to and fro till the blood ran down and soaked the bed-clothes still it wailed, "Let me in!" and maintained its tenacious gripe, almost maddening me with fear

"How can I?" I said at length "Let me go, if you want me to let you in!"

The fingers relaxed, I snatched mine through the hole, hurriedly piled the books up in a pyramid against it, and stopped my ears to exclude the lamentable prayer

I seemed to keep them closed above a quarter of an hour, yet, the instant I listened, again, there was the doleful cry moaning on!

"Begone!" I shouted, "I'll never let you in, not if you beg for twenty years!"

"It's twenty years," mourned the voice, "twenty years, I've been a waif for twenty years!"

Thereat began a feeble scratching outside, and the pile of books moved as if thrust forward

I tried to jump up, but, could not stir a limb, and so, yelled aloud, in a frenzy of fright

To my confusion, I discovered the yell was not ideal. Hasty footsteps approached my chamber door somebody pushed it open, with a vigorous hand, and a light glimmered through the squares at the top of the bed. I sat shuddering, yet, and wiping the perspiration from my forehead the intruder appeared to hesitate and muttered to himself

At last, he said in a half-whisper, plainly not expecting an answer,

"Is any one here?"

I considered it best to confess my presence, for I knew Heathcliff's accents, and feared he might search further, if I kept quiet.

With this intention, I turned and opened the panels—I shall not soon forget the effect my action produced

Heathcliff stood near the entrance, in his shirt and trousers, with a candle dripping over his fingers, and his face as white as the wall behind him. The first creak of the oak startled him like an electric shock the light leaped from his hold to a distance of some feet, and his agitation was so extreme, that he could hardly pick it up

"It is only your guest, sir," I called out, desirous to spare him the humiliation of exposing his cowardice further. "I had the misfortune to scream in my sleep, owing to a frightful nightmare. I'm sorry I disturbed you."

"Oh, God confound you, Mr Lockwood! I wish you were at the—" commenced my host setting the candle on a chair, because he found it impossible to hold it steady

"And who showed you up to this room?" he continued, crushing his nails into his palms, and grinding his teeth to subdue the maxillary convulsions. "Who was it? I've a good mind to turn them out of the house, this moment!"

"It was your servant, Zillah," I replied flinging myself, on to the floor, and rapidly resuming my garments "I should not care if you did, Mr Heathcliff, she richly deserves it I suppose that she wanted to get another proof that the place was haunted, at my expense—Well, it is—swarming with ghosts and goblins! You have reason in shutting it up, I assure you No one will thank you for a doze in such a den!"

"What do you mean?" asked Heathcliff, "and what are you doing? Lie down and finish out the night, since you are here, but, for Heaven's sake! don't repeat that horrid noise—Nothing could excuse it, unless you were having your throat cut!"

"If the little fiend had got in at the window, she probably would have strangled me!" I returned "I'm not going to endure the persecutions of your hospitable ancestors, again—Was not the Reverend Jabez Branderham akin to you on the mother's side? And that mixx, Catherine Linton, or Earnshaw, or however she was called—she must have been a changeling—wicked little soul! She told me she had been walking the earth these twenty years a just punishment for her mortal transgressions, I've no doubt!"

Scarcely were these words uttered, when I recollected the association of Heathcliff's with Catherine's name in the book, which had completely slipped from my memory till thus awakened I blushed at my inconsideration, but without showing further consciousness of the offence, I hastened to add,

"The truth is, sir, I passed the first part of the night in—" Here, I stopped afresh—I was about to say "perusing those old volumes," then it would have revealed my knowledge of them written, as well as their printed contents, so correcting myself, I went on,

"In spelling over the name scratched on that window-ledge A monotonous occupation, calculated to set me asleep, like counting, or——"

"What can you mean, by talking in this way to me?" thundered Heathcliff with savage vehemence "How—how dare you, under my roof—God! he's mad to speak so!" And he struck his forehead with rage

I did not know whether to resent this language, or pursue my explanation, but he seemed so powerfully affected that I took pity and proceeded with my dreams, affirming I had never heard the appellation of "Catherine Linton," before, but, reading it often over produced an impression which personified itself when I had no longer my imagination under control

Heathcliff gradually fell back into the shelter of the bed, as I spoke, finally, sitting down almost concealed behind it I guessed, however, by his irregular and intercepted breathing, that he struggled to vanquish an access of violent emotion

Not liking to show him that I heard the conflict, I continued my toilette rather noisily, looked at my watch, and soliloquised on the length of the night

"Not three o'clock, yet! I could have taken oath it had been six—time stagnates here—we must surely have retired to rest at eight!"

"Always at nine in winter, and always rise at four," said my host, suppressing a groan, and, as I fancied, by the motion of his shadow's arm, dashing a tear from his eyes

"Mr Lockwood," he added, "you may go into my room, you'll only be in the way, coming down stairs so early and your childish outcry has sent sleep to the devil for me"

"And for me too," I replied "I'll walk in the yard till daylight, and then I'll be off, and you need not dread a repetition of my intrusion I am now quite cured of seeking pleasure in society, be it country or town A sensible man ought to find sufficient company in himself"

"Delightful company!" muttered Heathcliff "Take the candle, and go where you please I shall join you directly Keep out of the yard, though, the dogs are unchained, and the house—Juno mounts sentinel there—and—nay, you can only ramble about the steps and passages—but, away with you! I'll come in two minutes"

I obeyed, so far as to quit the chamber, when, ignorant where the narrow lobbies led, I stood still, and was witness, involuntarily, to a piece of superstition on the part of my landlord, which belied, oddly, his apparent sense

He got on to the bed, and wrenched open the lattice, bursting, as he pulled at it, into an uncontrollable passion of tears

"Come in! come in!" he sobbed "Cathy, do come Oh do—once more! Oh! my heart's darling, hear me this time—Catherine, at last!"

The spectre showed a spectre's ordinary caprice, it gave no sign of being, but the snow and wind whirled wildly through, even reaching my station, and blowing out the light

There was such an anguish in the gush of grief that accompanied this raving, that my compassion made me overlook its folly, and I drew off, half angry to have listened at all, and vexed at having related my ridiculous nightmare, since it produced that agony, though why, was beyond my comprehension

I descended cautiously to the lower regions and landed in the back-kitchen, where a gleam of fire, raked compactly together, enabled me to rekindle my candle

Nothing was stirring except a brindled, grey cat, which crept from the ashes, and saluted me with a querulous mew

Two benches, shaped in sections of a circle, nearly enclosed the hearth, on one of these I stretched myself, and Grimalkin mounted the other. We were both of us nodding, ere any one invaded our retreat, and then it was Joseph shuffling down a wooden ladder that vanished in the roof, through a trap, the ascent to his garret, I suppose

He cast a sinister look at the little flame which I had enticed to play between the ribs, swept the cat from its elevation, and bestowing himself in the vacancy, commenced the operation of stuffing a three-inch pipe with tobacco, my presence in his sanctum was evidently esteemed a piece of impudence too shameful for remark. He silently applied the tube to his lips, folded his arms, and puffed away

I let him enjoy the luxury, unannoyed, and after sucking out the last wreath, and heaving a profound sigh, he got up, and departed as solemnly as he came

A more elastic footstep entered next, and now I opened my mouth for a "good morning," but closed it again, the salutation unachieved, for Hareton Earnshaw was performing his orisons, sotto voce, in a series of curses directed against every object he touched, while he rummaged a corner, for a spade or shovel to dig through the drifts. He glanced over the back of the bench dilating his nostrils, and thought as little of exchanging civilities with me, as with my companion, the cat

I guessed by his preparations that egress was allowed, and leaving my hard couch, made a movement to follow him. He noticed this, and thrust at an inner door with the end of his spade, intimating by an inarticulate sound, that there was the place where I must go, if I changed my locality

It opened into the house, where the females were already astir, Zillah urging flakes of flame up the chimney with a colossal bellows, and Mrs Heathcliff, kneeling on the hearth, reading a book by the aid of the blaze

She held her hand interposed between the furnace-heat and her eyes, and seemed absorbed in her occupation desisting from

it only to chide the servant for covering her with sparks, or to push away a dog, now and then, that snoozled its nose over forwardly into her face

I was surprised to see Heathcliff there also. He stood by the fire, his back towards me, just finishing a stormy scene to poor Zillah, who ever and anon interrupted her labour to pluck up the corner of her apron, and heave an indignant groan.

"And you, you worthless—" he broke out as I entered, turning to his daughter-in-law, and employing an epithet as harmless as duck, or sheep, but generally represented by a dash. "There you are at your idle tricks again! The rest of them do earn their bread—you live on my charity! Put your trash away, and find something to do. You shall pay me for the plague of having you eternally in my sight—do you hear, damnable jade?"

"I'll put my trash away, because you can make me, if I refuse," answered the young lady, closing her book, and throwing it on a chair. "But I'll not do anything, though you should swear your tongue out, except what I please!"

Heathcliff lifted his hand, and the speaker sprang to a safer distance, obviously acquainted with its weight.

Having no desire to be entertained by a cat and dog combat, I stepped forward briskly, as if eager to partake the warmth of the hearth, and innocent of any knowledge of the interrupted dispute. Each had enough decorum to suspend further hostilities, Heathcliff placed his fists, out of temptation, in his pockets. Mrs. Heathcliff curled her lip, and walked to a seat far off, where she kept her word by playing the part of a statue during the remainder of my stay.

That was not long. I declined joining their breakfast, and, at the first gleam of dawn, took an opportunity of escaping into the free air, now clear, and still, and cold as impalpable ice.

My landlord hallooed for me to stop ere I reached the bottom of the garden, and offered to accompany me across the moor. It was well he did, for the whole hill-back was one billowy, white ocean, the swells and falls not indicating corresponding rises and depressions in the ground—many pits, at least, were filled to a level, and entire ranges of mounds, the refuse of the quarries, blotted from the chart which my yesterday's walk left pictured in my mind.

I had remarked on one side of the road, at intervals of six or seven yards, a line of upright stones, continued through the whole length of the barren. These were erected, and daubed with lime, on purpose to serve as guides in the dark, and also, when a fall, like the present, confounded the deep swamps on either hand with the firmer path but, excepting a dirty dot pointing up, here and there, all traces of their existence had vanished, and my companion found it necessary to warn me frequently to steer to the right, or left, when I imagined I was following, correctly, the windings of the road

We exchanged little conversation, and he halted at the entrance of Thrushcross park, saying, I could make no error there Our adieux were limited to a hasty bow, and then I pushed forward, trusting to my own resources, for the porter's lodge is untenanted as yet

This distance from the gate to the Grange is two miles I believe I managed to make it four, what with losing myself among the trees, and sinking up to the neck in snow, a predicament which only those who have experienced it can appreciate At any rate, whatever were my wanderings, the clock chimed twelve as I entered the house, and that gave exactly an hour for every mile of the usual way from Wuthering Heights

My human fixture, and her satellites rushed to welcome me, exclaiming, tumultuously, they had completely given me up, everybody conjectured that I perished last night, and they were wondering how they must set about the search for my remains

I bid them be quiet, now that they saw me returned, and, benumbed to my very heart, I dragged up-stairs, whence, after putting on dry clothes, and pacing to and fro, thirty or forty minutes, to restore the animal heat, I am adjourned to my study, feeble as a kitten, almost too much so to enjoy the cheerful fire and smoking coffee which the servant has prepared for my refreshment

---

CHAPTER IV

---

WHAT VAIN weather-cocks we are! I, who had determined to hold myself independent of all social intercourse, and thanked my stars that, at length, I had lighted on a spot where it was next to impracticable I, weak wretch, after maintaining till dusk a struggle with low spirits, and solitude, was finally compelled to strike my colours, and, under pretence of gaining information concerning the necessities of my establishment, I desired Mrs Dean, when she brought in supper, to sit down while I ate it, hoping sincerely she would prove a regular gossip, and either rouse me to animation, or lull me to sleep by her talk

"You have lived here a considerable time," I commenced, "did you not say sixteen years?"

"Eighteen, sir, I came, when the mistress was married, to wait on her, after she died, the master retained me for his house-keeper"

"Indeed"

There ensued a pause She was not a gossip, I feared, unless about her own affairs, and those could hardly interest me

However, having studied for an interval, with a fist on either knee, and a cloud of meditation over her ruddy countenance, she ejaculated—

"Ah, times are greatly changed since then!"

"Yes," I remarked, "you've seen a good many alterations, I suppose?"

"I have and troubles, too," she said

"Oh, I'll turn the talk on my landlord's family!" I thought to myself "A good subject to start—and that pretty girl-widow, I should like to know her history, whether she be a native of the country, or, as is more probable, an exotic that the surly indigenae will not recognise for kin"

With this intention I asked Mrs Dean why Heathcliff let Thrushcross Grange, and preferred living in a situation and residence so much inferior

"Is he not rich enough to keep the estate in good order?" I enquired

"Rich, sir!" she returned "He has, nobody knows what money, and every year it increases Yes, yes, he's rich enough to live in a finer house than this, but he's very near—close-handed, and, if he had meant to flit to Thrushcross Grange, as soon as he heard of a good tenant, he could not have borne to miss the chance of getting a few hundreds more It is strange people should be so greedy, when they are alone in the world!"

"He had a son, it seems?"

"Yes, he had one—he is dead "

"And that young lady, Mrs Heathcliff, is his widow?"

"Yes "

"Where did she come from originally?"

"Why, sir, she is my late master's daughter, Catherine Linton was her maiden name I nursed her, poor thing! I did wish Mr Heathcliff would remove here, and then we might have been together again "

"What, Catherine Linton!" I exclaimed, astonished But a minute's reflection convinced me it was not my ghostly Catherine "Then," I continued, "my predecessor's name was Linton?"

"It was "

"And who is that Earnshaw, Hareton Earnshaw, who lives with Mr Heathcliff? are they relations?"

"No, he is the late Mrs Linton's nephew "

"The young lady's cousin, then?"

"Yes, and her husband was her cousin also—one, on the mother's—the other, on the father's side—Heathcliff married Mr Linton's sister "

"I see the house at Wuthering Heights has 'Earnshaw' carved over the front door Are they an old family?"

"Very old, sir, and Hareton is the last of them, as our Miss Cathy is of us—I mean, of the Lintons Have you been to Wuthering Heights? I beg pardon for asking, but I should like to hear how she is!"

"Mrs Heathcliff? she looked very well, and very handsome, yet, I think, not very happy "

"Oh dear, I don't wonder! And how did you like the master?"

"A rough fellow, rather, Mrs Dean Is not that his character?"

"Rough as a saw-edge, and hard as whinstone The less you meddle with him the better "

"He must have had some ups and downs in life to make him such a churl Do you know anything of his history?"

"It's a cuckoo's, sir—I know all about it, except where he was born, and who were his parents, and how he got his money, at first—And Hareton has been cast out like an unfledged dunnoek—The unfortunate lad is the only one, in all this parish, that does not guess how he has been cheated!"

"Well, Mrs Dean, it will be a charitable deed to tell me something of my neighbours—I feel I shall not rest, if I go to bed, so, be good enough to sit, and chat an hour "

"Oh, certainly, sir! I'll just fetch a little sewing, and then I'll sit as long as you please. But you've caught cold, I saw you shivering, and you must have some gruel to drive it out."

The worthy woman bustled off, and I crouched nearer the fire. My head felt hot, and the rest of me chill. Moreover I was excited, almost to a pitch of foolishness through my nerves and brain. This caused me to feel, not uncomfortable, but rather fearful, as I am still, of serious effects from the incidents of to-day and yesterday.

She returned presently, bringing a smoking basin, and a basket of work, and, having placed the former on the hob, drew in her seat, evidently pleased to find me so companionable.

Before I came to live here, she commenced, waiting no further invitation to her story, I was almost always at Wuthering Heights, because, my mother had nursed Mr Hindley Earnshaw, that was Hareton's father, and I got used to playing with the children—I ran errands too, and helped to make hay, and hung about the farm ready for anything that anybody would set me to.

One fine summer morning—it was the beginning of harvest, I remember—Mr Earnshaw, the old master, came down stairs, dressed for a journey, and, after he had told Joseph what was to be done during the day, he turned to Hindley, and Cathy, and me—for I sat eating my porridge, with them, and he said, speaking to his son,

"Now my bonny man, I'm going to Liverpool, to-day. What shall I bring you? You may choose what you like, only let it be little, for I shall walk there and back, sixty miles each way, that is a long spell!"

Hindley named a fiddle, and then he asked Miss Cathy, she was hardly six years old but she could ride any horse in the stable, and she chose a whip.

He did not forget me, for he had a kind heart, though he was rather severe, sometimes. He promised to bring me a pocketful of apples, and pears, and then he kissed his children good bye, and set off.

It seemed a long while to us all—the three days of his absence—and often did little Cathy ask when he would be home. Mrs Earnshaw expected him by supper-time, on the third evening, and she put the meal off hour after hour, there were no signs of his coming, however, and at last the children got tired of running down to the gate to look—Then it grew dark, she would have had them to bed, but they begged sadly to be allowed to stay up, and, just about eleven o'clock, the door-latch was raised quietly and in step the master. He threw himself into a chair, laughing and groaning, and bid them all stand off, for he was nearly killed—he would not have such another walk for the three kingdoms.

“And at the end of it, to be flighted to death!” he said opening his great coat, which he held bundled up in his arms. “See here, wife, I was never so beaten with anything in my life, but you must e'en take it is a gift of God, though it's as dark almost as if it came from the devil.”

We crowded round, and, over Miss Cathy's head, I had a peep at a dirty, ragged, black-haired child, big enough both to walk and talk—indeed, its face looked older than Catherine's—yet, when it was set on its feet, it only stared round, and repeated over and over again, some gibberish that nobody could understand. I was frightened, and Mrs Earnshaw was ready to fling it out of doors. She did fly up—asking how he could fashion to bring that gipsy brat into the house, when they had their own barns to feed, and fend for? What he meant to do with it, and whether he were mad?

The master tried to explain the matter, but, he was really half dead with fatigue, and all that I could make out, amongst her scolding, was a tale of his seeing it starving, and houseless, and as good as dumb in the streets of Liverpool where he picked it up and inquired for its owner—Not a soul knew to whom it belonged, he said, and his money and time, being both limited, he thought it better, to take it home with him, at once, than run into vain expenses there, because he was determined he would not leave it as he found it.

Well, the conclusion was that my mistress grumbled herself calm, and Mr Earnshaw told me to wash it, and give it clean things, and let it sleep with the children.

Hindley and Cathy contented themselves with looking and listening till peace was restored. Then, both began searching their father's pockets for the presents he had promised them. The former was a boy of fourteen, but when he drew out what had been a fiddle crushed to morsels in the great coat, he blubbered aloud, and Cathy, when she learnt the master had lost her whip in attending on the stranger, showed her humour by grinning and spitting at the stupid little thing, earning for her pains, a sound blow from her father to teach her cleaner manners

They entirely refused to have it in bed with them, or even in their room, and I had no more sense, so, I put it on the landing of the stairs, hoping it might be gone on the morrow. By chance, or else attracted by hearing his voice, it crept to Mr Earnshaw's door and there he found it on quitting his chamber. Inquiries were made as to how it got there, I was obliged to confess, and in recompense for my cowardice and inhumanity was sent out of the house

This was Heathcliff's first introduction to the family on coming back a few days afterwards, for I did not consider my banishment perpetual, I found they had christened him "Heathcliff," it was the name of a son who died in childhood, and it has served him ever since, both for christian and surname

Miss Cathy and he were now very thick, but Hindley hated him, and to say the truth I did the same, and we plagued and went on with him shamefully, for I wasn't reasonable enough to feel my injustice, and the mistress never put in a word on his behalf, when she saw him wronged

He seemed a sullen, patient child, hardened, perhaps, to ill-treatment: he would stand Hindley's blows without a wink or shedding a tear, and my pinches moved him only to draw in a breath, and open his eyes as if he had hurt himself by accident, and nobody was to blame

This endurance made old Earnshaw furious when he discovered his son persecuting the poor, fatherless child, as he called him. He took to Heathcliff strangely, believing all he said (for that matter, he said precious little, and generally the truth,) and petting him up far above Cathy, who was too mischievous and wayward for a favourite

So, from the very beginning, he bred bad feeling in the house, and at Mrs Earnshaw's death, which happened in less than two years after, the young master had learnt to regard his father as an oppressor rather than a friend, and Heathcliff as a usurper of his parent's affections, and his privileges, and he grew bitter with brooding over these injuries

I sympathised awhile, but, when the children fell ill of the measles and I had to tend them, and take on me the cares of a woman, at once, I changed my ideas. Heathcliff was dangerously sick, and while he lay at the worst he would have me constantly by his pillow, I suppose he felt I did a good deal for him, and he hadn't wit to guess that I was compelled to do it. However, I will say this, he was the quietest child that ever nurse watched over. The difference between him and the others forced me to be less partial. Cathy and her brother harassed me terribly. he was as uncomplaining as a lamb, though hardness, not gentleness, made him give little trouble.

He got through, and the doctor affirmed it was in a great measure owing to me, and praised me for my care. I was vain of his commendations, and softened towards the being by whose means I earned them, and thus Hindley lost his last ally, still I couldn't dote on Heathcliff, and I wondered often what my master saw to admire so much in the sullen boy who never, to my recollection, repaid his indulgence by any sign of gratitude. He was not insolent to his benefactor, he was simply insensible, though knowing perfectly the hold he had on his heart, and conscious he had only to speak and all the house would be obliged to bend to his wishes.

As an instance, I remember Mr Earnshaw once bought a couple of colts at the parish fair, and gave the lads each one. Heathcliff took the handsomest, but it soon fell lame, and when he discovered it, he said to Hindley,

"You must exchange horses with me, I don't like mine, and, if you won't I shall tell your father of the three thrashings you've given me this week, and show him my arm which is black to the shoulder."

Hindley put out his tongue, and cuffed him over the ears.

"You'd better do it, at once," he persisted, escaping to the porch, (they were in the stable) "you will have to, and, if I speak of these blows, you'll get them again with interest."

"Off dog!" cried Hindley, threatening him with an iron weight, used for weighing potatoes and hay.

"Throw it," he replied, standing still, "and then I'll tell how you boasted that you would turn me out of doors as soon as he died, and see whether he will not turn you out directly."

Hindley threw it, hitting him on the breast, and down he fell, but staggered up, immediately, breathless and white, and had not I prevented it he would have gone just so to the master, and got full revenge by letting his condition plead for him, intimating who had caused it.

"Take my colt, gipsy, then!" said young Earnshaw, "And I pray that he may break your neck, take him, and be damned, you beggarly interloper! and wheedle my father out of all he has, only, afterwards, show him what you are, imp of Satan—And take that, I hope he'll kick out your brains!"

Heathcliff had gone to loose the beast, and shift it to his own stall—He was passing behind it, when Hindley finished his speech by knocking him under its feet, and without stopping to examine whether his hopes were fulfilled, ran away as fast he could

I was surprised to witness how coolly the child gathered himself up, and went on with his intention, exchanging saddles and all, and then sitting down on a bundle of hay to overcome the qualm which the violent blow occasioned, before he entered the house

I persuaded him easily to let me lay the blame of his bruises on the horse, he minded little what tale was told since he had what he wanted. He complained so seldom, indeed, of such stirs as these, that I really thought him not vindictive—I was deceived, completely, as you will hear

---

CHAPTER V

---

~~~~~

IN the course of time, Mr Earnshaw began to fail. He had been active and healthy, yet his strength left him suddenly, and when he was confined to the chimney-corner he grew grievously irritable. A nothing vexed him, and suspected slights of his authority nearly threw him into fits.

This was especially to be remarked if any one attempted to impose upon, or domineer over his favourite: he was painfully jealous lest a word should be spoken amiss to him, seeming to have got into his head the notion that, because he liked Heathcliff, all hated, and longed to do him an ill-turn.

It was a disadvantage to the lad, for the kinder among us did not wish to fret the master, so we humoured his partiality, and that humouring was rich nourishment to the child's pride and black tempers. Still it became in a manner necessary, twice, or thrice, Hindley's manifestation of scorn, while his father was near, roused the old man to a fury. He seized his stick to strike him, and shook with rage that he could not do it.

At last, our curate, (we had a curate then who made the living answer by teaching the little Lintons and Earnshaws, and farming his bit of land himself,) he advised that the young man should be sent to college, and Mr Earnshaw agreed, though with a heavy spirit, for he said—

“Hindley was nought, and would never thrive as where he wandered.”

I hoped heartily we should have peace now. It hurt me to think the master should be made uncomfortable by his own good deed. I fancied the discontent of age and disease arose from his family disagreements, as he would have it that it did—really, you know, sir, it was in his sinking frame.

We might have got on tolerably, notwithstanding, but, for two people, Miss Cathy, and Joseph, the servant, you saw him, I dare say, up yonder. He was, and is yet, most likely, the wearisomest self-righteous pharisee that ever ransacked a bible to rake the promises to himself, and fling the curses on his neighbours. By his knack of sermonizing and pious discoursing, he contrived to make a great impression on Mr Earnshaw, and, the more feeble the master became, the more influence he gained.

He was relentless in worrying him about his soul's concerns, and about ruling his children rigidly. He encouraged him to regard Hindley as a reprobate, and, night after night, he regularly grumbled out a long string of tales against Heathcliff and Catherine, always minding to flatter Earnshaw's weakness by heaping the heaviest blame on the last.

Certainly, she had ways with her such as I never saw a child take up before, and she put all of us past our patience fifty times and oftener in a day. From the hour she came down stairs, till the hour she went to bed, we had not a minute's security that she wouldn't be in mischief. Her spirits were always at high-water mark, her tongue always going—singing, laughing, and plaguing everybody who would not do the same. A wild, wick slip she was—but, she had the bonniest eye, and sweetest smile, and lightest foot in the parish, and, after all, I believe she meant no harm, for when once she made you cry in good earnest, it seldom happened that she would not keep you company, and oblige you to be quiet that you might comfort her.

She was much too fond of Heathcliff. The greatest punishment

we could invent for her was to keep her separate from him yet, she got chided more than any of us on his account

In play, she liked, exceedingly, to act the little mistress, using her hands freely, and commanding her companions she did so to me, but I would not bear slapping, and ordering, and so I let her know

Now, Mr Earnshaw did not understand jokes from his children he had always been strict and grave with them, and Catherine, on her part, had no idea why her father should be crosser and less patient in his ailing condition, than he was in his prime

His peevish reproofs wakened in her a naughty delight to provoke him, she was never so happy as when we were all scolding her at once, and she defying us with her bold, saucy look, and her ready words, turning Joseph's religious curses into ridicule, bating me, and doing just what her father hated most, showing how her pretended insolence, which he thought real, had more power over Heathcliff than his kindness How the boy would do her bidding in anything, and his only when it suited his own inclination

After behaving as badly as possible all day, she sometimes came fondling to make it up at night

"Nay, Cathy," the old man would say, "I cannot love thee, thou'rt worse than thy brother Go, say thy prayers, child, and ask God's pardon I doubt thy mother and I must rue that we ever reared thee!"

That made her cry, at first, and then, being repulsed continually hardened her, and she laughed if I told her to say she was sorry for her faults, and beg to be forgiven

But the hour came, at last, that ended Mr Earnshaw's troubles on earth He died quietly in his chair one October evening, seated by the fire-side

A high wind blustered round the house, and roared in the chimney it sounded wild and stormy, yet it was not cold, and we were all together—I, a little removed from the hearth, busy at my knitting, and Joseph reading his Bible near the table, (for the servants generally sat in the house then, after their work was done) Miss Cathy had been sick, and that made her still, she leant against her father's knee, and Heathcliff was lying on the floor with his head in her lap

I remember the master, before he fell into a doze, stroking her

bonny hair—it pleased him rarely to see her gentle—and saying—“Why canst thou not always be a good lass, Cathy?”

And she turned her face up to his, and laughed, and answered—
“Why cannot you always be a good man, father?”

But as soon as she saw him vexed again, she kissed his hand, and said she would sing him to sleep. She began singing very low, till his fingers dropped from hers, and his head sank on his breast. Then I told her to hush, and not stir, for fear she should wake him. We all kept as mute as mice a full half-hour, and should have done longer, only Joseph, having finished his chapter, got up and said that he must rouse the master for prayers and bed. He stepped forward, and called him by name, and touched his shoulder, but he would not move—so he took the candle and looked at him.

I thought there was something wrong as he set down the light, and seizing the children each by an arm, whispered them to “frame up-stairs, and make little din—they might pray alone that evening—he had summut to do.”

“I shall bid father good-night first,” said Catherine, putting her arms round his neck, before we could hinder her.

The poor thing discovered her loss directly—she screamed out—

“Oh, he’s dead, Heathcliff! he’s dead!”

And they both set up a heart-breaking cry.

I joined my wail to theirs, loud and bitter, but Joseph asked what we could be thinking of to roar in that way over a saint in Heaven.

He told me to put on my cloak and run to Gimmerton for the doctor and the parson. I could not guess the use that either would be of, then. However, I went, through wind and rain, and brought one, the doctor, back with me, the other said he would come in the morning.

Leaving Joseph to explain matters, I ran to the children’s room, their door was ajar, I saw they had never laid down, though it was past midnight, but they were calmer, and did not need me to console them. The little souls were comforting each other with better thoughts than I could have hit on, no parson in the world ever pictured Heaven so beautifully as they did, in their innocent talk, and, while I sobbed, and listened, I could not help wishing we were all there safe together.

---

CHAPTER VI

---

MR HINDLEY came home to the funeral, and—a thing that amazed us, and set the neighbours gossiping right and left—he brought a wife with him

What she was, and where she was born he never informed us, probably, she had neither money nor name to recommend her, or he would scarcely have kept the union from his father

She was not one that would have disturbed the house much on her own account Every object she saw, the moment she crossed the threshold, appeared to delight her, and every circumstance that took place about her, except the preparing for the burial, and the presence of the mourners

I thought she was half silly from her behaviour while that went on, she ran into her chamber, and made me come with her, though I should have been dressing the children, and there she sat shivering and clasping her hands, and asking repeatedly—

“Are they gone yet?”

Then she began describing with hysterical emotion the effect it produced on her to see black, and started, and trembled, and, at last, fell a weeping—and when I asked what was the matter? answered, she didn’t know, but she felt so afraid of dying!

I imagined her as little likely to die as myself She was rather thin, but young, and fresh complexioned, and her eyes sparkled as bright as diamonds I did remark, to be sure, that mounting the stairs made her breathe very quick, that the least sudden noise set her all in a quiver, and that she coughed troublesomely sometimes but, I knew nothing of what these symptoms portended, and had no impulse to sympathize with her We don’t in general take to foreigners here, Mr Lockwood, unless they take to us first

Young Earnshaw was altered considerably in the three years of his absence He had grown sparer, and lost his colour, and spoke and dressed quite differently and, on the very day of his return, he told Joseph and me we must thenceforth quarter ourselves in the back-kitchen, and leave the house for him. Indeed he would have carpeted and papered a small spare room for a parlour, but his wife expressed such pleasure at the white floor, and huge glowing fire-place, at the pewter dishes and delf-case, and dog-kennel, and the wide space there was to move about in, where they usually sat, that he thought it unnecessary to her comfort, and so dropped the intention

She expressed pleasure, too, at finding a sister among her new acquaintance, and she prattled to Catherine, and kissed her, and ran about with her, and gave her quantities of presents, at the beginning Her affection tired very soon, however, and when she grew peevish, Hindley became tyrannical A few words from her, evincing a dislike to Heathcliff, were enough to rouse in him all his old hatred of the boy He drove him from their company to the servants, deprived him of the instructions of the curate, and insisted that he should labour out of doors instead, compelling him to do so, as hard as any other lad on the farm

Heathcliff bore his degradation pretty well at first, because Cathy taught him what she learnt, and worked or played with him in the fields They both promised fair to grow up as rude as savages, the young master being entirely negligent how they behaved, and what they did, so they kept clear of him He would not even have seen after their going to church on Sundays, only Joseph and the curate reprimanded his carelessness when they absented themselves, and that reminded him to order Heathcliff a flogging, and Catherine a fast from dinner or supper

But it was one of their chief amusements to run away to the moors in the morning and remain there all day, and the after punishment grew a mere thing to laugh at The curate might set as many chapters as he pleased for Catherine to get by heart, and Joseph might thrash Heathcliff till his arm ached, they forgot everything the minute they were together again, at least the minute they had contrived some naughty plan of revenge, and many a time I've cried to myself to watch them growing more reckless daily, and I not daring to speak a syllable for fear of losing the small power I still retained over the unfriended creatures

One Sunday evening, it chanced that they were banished from the sitting-room, for making a noise, or a light offence of the kind, and when I went to call them to supper, I could discover them nowhere

We searched the house, above and below, and the yard, and stables, they were invisible, and, at last, Hindley in a passion told us to bolt the doors, and swore nobody should let them in that night

The household went to bed, and I, too anxious to lie down, opened my lattice and put my head out to hearken, though it rained, determined to admit them in spite of the prohibition, should they return

In a while, I distinguished steps coming up the road, and the light of a lantern glimmered through the gate

I threw a shawl over my head and ran to prevent them from waking Mr Earnshaw by knocking There was Heathcliff, by himself, it gave me a start to see him alone

"Where is Miss Catherine?" I cried hurriedly "No accident, I hope?"

"At Thrushcross Grange," he answered "and I would have been there too, but they had not the manners to ask me to stay "

"Well, you will catch it!" I said, "you'll never be content till you're sent about your business What in the world led you wandering to Thrushcross Grange?"

"Let me get off my wet clothes, and I'll tell you all about it, Nelly," he replied

I bid him beware of rousing the master, and while he undressed, and I waited to put out the candle, he continued—

"Cathy and I escaped from the wash-house to have a ramble at liberty, and getting a glimpse of the Grange lights, we thought we would just go and see whether the Lintons passed their Sunday evenings standing shivering in corners, while their father and mother sat eating and drinking, and singing and laughing, and burning their eyes out before the fire Do you think they do? Or reading sermons, and being catechised by their man-servant, and set to learn a column of Scripture names, if they don't answer properly?"

"Probably not," I responded "They are good children, no doubt, and don't deserve the treatment you receive, for your bad conduct "

"Don't you cant, Nelly," he said "nonsense! We ran from the top of the Heights to the park, without stopping—Catherine completely beaten in the race, because she was barefoot You'll have to seek for her shoes in the bog tomorrow We crept through a broken hedge, groped our way up the path, and planted ourselves on a flower-pot under the drawing-room window The light came from thence, they had not put up the shutters, and the curtains were only half closed. Both of us were able to look in by standing on the basement, and clinging to the ledge, and we saw—ah! it was beautiful—a splendid place carpeted with crimson, and crimson-covered chairs and tables, and a pure white ceiling bordered by gold, a shower of glass-drops hanging in silver chains from the centre, and shimmering with little soft tapers. Old Mr and Mrs Linton were not there. Edgar and his sister had it entirely to themselves, shouldn't they have been happy? We should have thought ourselves in heaven! And now, guess what your good children were doing? Isabella, I believe she is eleven, a year younger than Cathy, lay screaming at the farther end of the room, shrieking as if witches were running red hot needles into her. Edgar stood on the hearth weeping silently, and in the middle of the table sat a little dog shaking its paw and yelping, which, from their mutual accusations, we understood they had nearly pulled in two between them. The idiots! That was their pleasure! to quarrel who should hold a heap of warm hair, and each begin to cry because both, after struggling to get it, refused to take it. We laughed outright at the petted things, we did despise them! When would you catch me wishing to have what Catherine wanted? or find us by ourselves, seeing entertainment in yelling, and sobbing, and rolling on the ground, divided by the whole room? I'd not exchange, for a thousand lives, my condition here, for Edgar Linton's at Thrushcross Grange—not if I might have the privilege of flinging Joseph off the highest gable, and painting the house-front with Hindley's blood!"

"Hush, hush!" I interrupted. "Still you have not told me, Heathcliff, how Catherine is left behind?"

"I told you we laughed," he answered. "The Lintons heard us, and with one accord, they shot like arrows to the door, there was silence, and then a cry, 'Oh, mamma, mamma! Oh, papa! Oh, mamma, come here. Oh, papa, oh!'" They really did howl out, something in that way. We made frightful noises to terrify them still more, and then we dropped off the ledge, because somebody was drawing the bars, and we felt we had better flee. I had Cathy by the hand, and was urging her on, when all at once she fell down.

"'Run, Heathcliff, run!'" she whispered. "They have let the bull-dog loose, and he holds me!"

"The devil had seized her ankle, Nelly, I heard his abominable snorting. She did not yell out—no! She would have scorned to do it, if she had been spitted on the horns of a mad cow. I did, though, I vociferated curses enough to annihilate any fiend in Christendom, and I got a stone and thrust it between his jaws, and tried with all my might to cram it down his throat. A beast of a servant came up with a lantern, at last, shouting—

"'Keep fast, Skulker, keep fast!' He changed his note, however, when he saw Skulker's game. The dog was throttled off, his huge, purple tongue hanging half a foot out of his mouth, and his pendant lips streaming with bloody slaver.

"The man took Cathy up, she was sick, not from fear, I'm certain, but from pain. He carried her in, I followed grumbling execrations and vengeance.

"'What prey, Robert?' hallooed Linton from the entrance.

"'Skulker has caught a little girl, sir,' he replied, 'and there's a lad here,' he added, making a clutch at me, 'who looks an out-and-outer! Very like, the robbers were for putting them through the window, to open the doors to the gang after all were asleep, that they might murder us at their ease. Hold your tongue, you foul-mouthed thief, you! you shall go to the gallows for this Mr Linton, sir, don't lay by your gun!'

"'No, no, Robert,' said the old fool. 'The rascals knew that yesterday was my rent day, they thought to have me cleverly. Come in, I'll furnish them a reception. There, John, fasten the chain. Give Skulker some water, Jenny. To beard a magistrate in his stronghold, and on the Sabbath, too! where will their insolence stop? Oh, my dear Mary, look here! Don't be afraid, it is but a boy—yet, the villain scowls so plainly in his face, would it not be a kindness to the country to hang him at once, before he shows his nature in acts, as well as features?'

"He pulled me under the chandelier, and Mrs Linton placed her spectacles on her nose and raised her hands in horror. The cowardly children crept nearer also, Isabella hisping—

"'Frightful thing! Put him in the cellar, papa. He's exactly like the son of the fortune-teller, that stole my tame pheasant. Isn't he, Edgar?'

"While they examined me, Cathy came round, she heard the last speech, and laughed. Edgar Linton, after an inquisitive stare, collected sufficient wit to recognise her. They see us at church, you know, though we seldom meet them elsewhere.

"That's Miss Earnshaw!" he whispered to his mother, 'and look how Skulker has bitten her—how her foot bleeds!'

"'Miss Earnshaw! Nonsense!' cried the dame, 'Miss Earnshaw scouring the country with a gipsy! And yet, my dear, the child is in mourning—surely it is—and she may be lamed for life!'

"'What culpable carelessness in her brother!' exclaimed Mr Linton, turning from me to Catherine 'I've understood from Shields'" (that was the curate, sir) "'that he lets her grow up in absolute heathenism But who is this? Where did she pick up this companion? Oho! I declare he is that strange acquisition my late neighbour made in his journey to Liverpool—a little Lascar, or an American or Spanish castaway'

"'A wicked boy, at all events,' remarked the old lady, 'and quite unfit for a decent house! Did you notice his language, Linton? I'm shocked that my children should have heard it'

"I recommenced cursing—don't be angry, Nelly—and so Robert was ordered to take me off—I refused to go without Cathy—he dragged me into the garden, pushed the lantern into my hand, assured me that Mr Earnshaw should be informed of my behaviour, and bidding me march, directly, secured the door again

"The curtains were still looped up at one corner, and I resumed my station as spy, because, if Catherine had wished to return, I intended shattering their great glass panes to a million fragments, unless they let her out

"She sat on the sofa quietly Mrs Linton took off the grey cloak of the dairy maid which we had borrowed for our excursion, shaking her head, and expostulating with her, I suppose, she was a young lady and they made a distinction between her treatment, and mine Then the woman servant brought a basin of warm water, and washed her feet, and Mr Linton mixed a tumbler of negus, and Isabella emptied a plateful of cakes into her lap, and Edgar, stood gaping at a distance Afterwards, they dried and combed her beautiful hair, and gave her a pair of enormous slippers, and wheeled her to the fire, and I left her, as merry as she could be, dividing her food, between the little dog and Skulker whose nose she pinched as he ate, and kindling a spark of spirit in the vacant blue eyes of the Lintons—a dim reflection from her own enchanting face—I saw they were full of stupid admiration, she is so immeasurably superior to them—to everybody on earth, is she not, Nelly?"

"There will more come of this business than you reckon on," I answered covering him up and extinguishing the light, "You are incurable, Heathcliff, and Mr Hindley will have to proceed to extremities, see if he won't"

My words came truer than I desired The luckless adventure made Earnshaw furious—And then, Mr Linton, to mend matters, paid us a visit himself, on the morrow, and read the young master such a lecture on the road he guided his family, that he was stirred to look about him, in earnest

Heathcliff received no flogging, but he was told that the first word he spoke to Miss Catherine should ensure a dismissal, and Mrs Earnshaw undertook to keep her sister-in-law in due restraint, when she returned home, employing art, not force—with force she would have found it impossible

---

CHAPTER VII

---

CATHY STAYED at Thrushcross Grange five weeks, till Christmas By that time her ankle was thoroughly cured, and her manners much improved The mistress visited her often, in the interval, and commenced her plan of reform, by trying to raise her self-respect with fine clothes, and flattery, which she took readily so that, instead of a wild, hatless little savage jumping into the house, and rushing to squeeze us all breathless, there lighted from a handsome black pony a very dignified person with brown ringlets falling from the cover of a feathered beaver, and a long cloth habit which she was obliged to hold up with both hands that she might sail in

Hindley lifted her from her horse exclaiming delightedly,

"Why, Cathy, you are quite a beauty! I should scarcely have known you—you look like a lady now—Isabella Linton is not to be compared with her, is she Frances?"

"Isabella has not her natural advantages," replied his wife, "but she must mind and not grow wild again here Ellen, help Miss Catherine off with her things—Stay, dear, you will disarrange your curls—let me untie your hat"

I removed the habit, and there shone forth, beneath a grand plaid silk frock, white trousers, and burnished shoes, and, while her eyes sparkled joyfully when the dogs came bounding up to welcome her, she dare hardly touch them lest they should fawn upon her splendid garments

She kissed me gently, I was all flour making the christmas cake, and it would not have done to give me a hug, and, then, she looked round for Heathcliff Mr and Mrs Earnshaw watched anxiously their meeting, thinking it would enable them to judge, in some measure, what grounds they had for hoping to succeed in separating the two friends

Heathcliff was hard to discover, at first—If he were careless, and uncared for, before Catherine's absence, he had been ten times more so, since

Nobody, but I, even did him the kindness to call him a dirty boy, and bid him wash himself, once a week, and children of his age, seldom have a natural pleasure in soap and water Therefore, not to mention his clothes, which had seen three months' service, in mire and dust, and his thick uncombed hair, the surface of his face and hands was dismally beclouded He might well skulk behind the settle, on beholding such a bright, graceful damsel enter the house, instead of a rough-headed counterpart to himself, as he expected

"Is Heathcliff not here?" she demanded pulling off her gloves, and displaying fingers wonderfully whitened with doing nothing, and staying in doors

"Heathcliff, you may come forward," cried Mr Hindley enjoying his discomfiture and gratified to see what a forbidding young blackguard he would be compelled to present himself "You may come and wish Miss Catherine welcome, like the other servants"

Cathy, catching a glimpse of her friend in his concealment, flew to embrace him, she bestowed seven or eight kisses on his cheek within the second, and, then, stopped, and drawing back, burst into a laugh, exclaiming,

"Why, how very black and cross you look! and how—how funny and grim! But that's because I'm used to Edgar, and Isabella Linton Well, Heathcliff, have you forgotten me?"

She had some reason to put the question, for shame, and pride threw double gloom over his countenance, and kept him immovable

‘Shake hands, Heathcliff,’ said Mr Earnshaw, condescendingly, “once in a way, that is permitted”

“I shall not!” replied the boy, finding his tongue at last, “I shall not stand to be laughed at, I shall not bear it!”

And he would have broken from the circle, but Miss Cathy seized him again

“I did not mean to laugh at you,” she said, “I could not hinder myself, Heathcliff, shake hands, at least! What are you sulky for? It was only that you looked odd—If you wash your face, and brush your hair it will be all right But you are so dirty!”

She gazed concernedly at the dusky fingers she held in her own, and also at her dress which she feared had gained no embellishment from its contact with his

“You needn’t have touched me!” he answered, following her eye and snatching away his hand “I shall be as dirty as I please, and I like to be dirty, and I will be dirty”

With that he dashed head foremost out of the room, amid the merriment of the master and mistress, and to the serious disturbance of Catherine who could not comprehend how her remarks should have produced such an exhibition of bad temper

After playing lady’s maid to the new comer, and putting my cakes in the oven, and making the house and kitchen cheerful with great fires befitting Christmas eve, I prepared to sit down and amuse myself by singing carols, all alone, regardless of Joseph’s affirmations that he considered the merry tunes I chose as next door to songs

He had retired to private prayer in his chamber, and Mr and Mrs Earnshaw were engaging Missy’s attention by sundry gay trifles bought for her to present to the little Lintons, as an acknowledgment of their kindness

They had invited them to spend the morrow at Wuthering Heights, and the invitation had been accepted, on one condition Mrs Linton begged that her darlings might be kept carefully apart from that “naughty, swearing boy”

Under these circumstances I remained solitary I smelt the rich scent of the heating spices, and admired the shining kitchen utensils, the polished clock, decked in holly, the silver mugs ranged on a tray ready to be filled with mulled ale for supper, and, above all, the speckless purity of my particular care—the scoured and well-swept floor

I gave due inward applause to every object and, then, I remembered how old Earnshaw used to come in when all was tidied, and call me a cant lass, and slip a shilling into my hand, as a christmas box and, from that, I went on to think of his fondness for Heathcliff, and his dread lest he should suffer neglect after death had removed him, and that naturally led me to consider the poor lad's situation now, and from singing I changed my mind to crying. It struck me soon, however, there would be more sense in endeavouring to repair some of his wrongs than shedding tears over them—I got up and walked into the court to seek him.

He was not far, I found him smoothing the glossy coat of the new pony in the stable, and feeding the other beasts, according to custom.

"Make haste, Heathcliff!" I said, "the kitchen is so comfortable—and Joseph is up-stairs, make haste, and let me dress you smart before Miss Cathy comes out—and then you can sit together, with the whole hearth to yourselves, and have a long chatter till bed-time."

He proceeded with his task and never turned his head towards me.

"Come—are you coming?" I continued, "There's a little cake for each of you, nearly enough, and you'll need half an hour's donning."

I waited five minutes, but getting no answer left him. Catherine supped with her brother and sister-in-law. Joseph and I joined in an unsociable meal seasoned with reproofs on one side, and sauciness on the other. His cake and cheese remained on the table all night, for the fairies. He managed to continue work till nine o'clock, and, then, marched dumb and dour, to his chamber.

Cathy sat up late, having a world of things to order for the reception of her new friends. She came into the kitchen, once, to speak to her old one, but he was gone, and she only staid to ask what was the matter with him, and then went back.

In the morning, he rose early, and, as it was a holiday, carried his ill-humour onto the moors, not re-appearing till the family were departed for church. Fasting, and reflection seemed to have brought him to a better spirit. He hung about me, for a while, and having screwed up his courage, exclaimed abruptly,

"Nelly, make me decent, I'm going to be good."

"High time, Heathcliff," I said, "you have grieved Catherine, she's sorry she ever came home, I dare say! It looks as if you envied her, because she is more thought of than you "

The notion of envying Catherine was incomprehensible to him, but the notion of grieving her, he understood clearly enough

"Did she say she was grieved?" he inquired, looking very serious

"She cried when I told her you were off again this morning "

"Well, I cried last night," he returned, "and I had more reason to cry than she "

"Yes, you had the reason of going to bed, with a proud heart, and an empty stomach," said I, "Proud people breed sad sorrows for themselves—But, if you be ashamed of your touchiness, you must ask pardon, mind, when she comes in You must go up, and offer to kiss her, and say—you know best what to say, only, do it heartily, and not as if you thought her converted into a stranger by her grand dress And now, though I have dinner to get ready, I'll steal time to arrange you so that Edgar Linton shall look quite a doll beside you and that he does—You are younger, and yet, I'll be bound, you are taller and twice as broad across the shoulders—you could knock him down in a twinkling, don't you feel that you could?"

Heathcliff's face brightened a moment, then, it was overcast afresh, and he sighed

"But, Nelly, if I knocked him down twenty times, that wouldn't make him less handsome, or me more so I wish I had light hair and a fair skin, and was dressed, and behaved as well, and had a chance of being as rich as he will be!"

"And cried for mamma, at every turn—" I added, "and trembled if a country lad heaved his fist against you, and sat at home all day for a shower of rain —O, Heathcliff, you are showing a poor spirit! Come to the glass, and I'll let you see what you should wish Do you mark those two lines between your eyes, and those thick brows, that instead of rising arched, sink in the middle, and that couple of black fiends, so deeply buried, who never open their windows boldly, but lurk glinting under them, like devil's spies? Wish and learn to smooth away the surly wrinkles, to raise your lids frankly, and change the fiends to confident, innocent angels, suspecting and doubting nothing, and always seeing friends where they are not sure of foes—Don't get the expression of a vicious cur that appears to know the kicks it gets are its desert, and yet, hates all the world, as well as the kicker, for what it suffers ”

“In other words, I must wish for Edgar Linton’s great blue eyes, and even forehead,” he replied “I do—and that won’t help me to them ”

‘A good heart will help you to a bonny face, my lad,” I continued, “if you were a regular black, and a bad one will turn the bonniest into something worse than ugly And now that we’ve done washing, and combing, and sulking—tell me whether you don’t think yourself rather handsome? I’ll tell you, I do You’re fit for a prince in disguise Who knows, but your father was Emperor of China, and your mother an Indian queen, each of them able to buy up, with one week’s income, Wuthering Heights and Thrushcross Grange together? And you were kidnapped by wicked sailors, and brought to England Were I in your place, I would frame high notions of my birth, and the thoughts of what I was should give me courage and dignity to support the oppressions of a little farmer!”

So I chattered on, and Heathcliff gradually lost his frown, and began to look quite pleasant, when all at once, our conversation was interrupted by a rumbling sound moving up the road and entering the court He ran to the window, and I to the door, just in time to behold the two Lintons descend from the family carriage, smothered in cloaks and furs, and the Earnshaws dismount from their horses—they often rode to church in winter Catherine took a hand of each of the children, and brought them into the house, and set them before the fire which quickly put colour into their white faces

I urged my companion to hasten now, and show his amiable humour, and he willingly obeyed but ill luck would have it, that as he opened the door leading from the kitchen on one side, Hindley opened it on the other, they met, and the master irritated at seeing him clean and cheerful, or, perhaps, eager to keep his promise to Mrs Linton shoved him back with a sudden thrust, and angrily bade Joseph “keep the fellow out of the room—send him into the garret till dinner is over He’ll be cramming his fingers in the tarts, and stealing the fruit, if left alone with them a minute ”

“Nay, sir,” I could not avoid answering, “he’ll touch nothing, not he—and, I suppose, he must have his share of the dainties as well as we ”

"He shall have his share of my hand, if I catch him down stairs again till dark," cried Hindley "Begone, you vagabond! What, you are attempting the coxcomb, are you? Wait till I get hold of those elegant locks—see if I won't pull them a bit longer!"

"They are long enough already," observed Master Linton, peeping from the door-way, "I wonder they don't make his head ache. It's like a colt's mane over his eyes!"

He ventured this remark without any intention to insult, but, Heathcliff's violent nature was not prepared to endure the appearance of impertinence from one whom he seemed to hate, even then, as a rival. He seized a tureen of hot apple-sauce, the first thing that came under his gripe, and dashed it full against the speaker's face and neck—who instantly commenced a lament that brought Isabella and Catherine hurrying to the place.

Mr Earnshaw snatched up the culprit directly and conveyed him to his chamber, where, doubtless, he administered a rough remedy to cool the fit of passion, for he reappeared red and breathless. I got the dish-cloth, and, rather spitefully, scrubbed Edgar's nose and mouth, affirming, it served him right for meddling. His sister began weeping to go home, and Cathy stood by confounded, blushing for all.

"You should not have spoken to him!" she expostulated with Master Linton. "He was in a bad temper, and now you've spoilt your visit, and he'll be flogged—I hate him to be flogged! I can't eat my dinner. Why did you speak to him, Edgar?"

"I didn't," sobbed the youth, escaping from my hands, and finishing the remainder of the purification with his cambric pocket-handkerchief. "I promised mamma that I wouldn't say one word to him, and I didn't."

"Well, don't cry!" replied Catherine, contemptuously. "You're not killed—don't make more mischief—my brother is coming—be quiet! Give over, Isabella! Has any body hurt you?"

"There, there, children—to your seats!" cried Hindley, bustling in. "That brute of a lad has warmed me nicely. Next time, Master Edgar, take the law into your own fists—it will give you an appetite!"

The little party recovered its equanimity at sight of the fragrant feast. They were hungry, after their ride, and easily consoled, since no real harm had befallen them.

Mr Earnshaw carved bountiful platefuls, and the mistress made them merry with lively talk. I waited behind her chair, and was pained to behold Catherine, with dry eyes and an indifferent air, commence cutting up the wing of a goose before her

"An unfeeling child," I thought to myself, "how lightly she dismisses her old playmate's troubles I could not have imagined her to be so selfish"

She lifted a mouthful to her lips, then, she set it down again her cheeks flushed, and the tears gushed over them She slipped her fork to the floor, and hastily dived under the cloth to conceal her emotion I did not call her unfeeling long, for, I perceived she was in purgatory throughout the day, and wearying to find an opportunity of getting by herself, or paying a visit to Heathcliff, who had been locked up by the master, as I discovered, on endeavouring to introduce to him a private mess of victuals

In the evening we had a dance Cathy begged that he might be liberated then, as Isabella Linton had no partner, her entreaties were vain, and I was appointed to supply the deficiency

We got rid of all gloom in the excitement of the exercise, and our pleasure was increased by the arrival of the Gimmerton band, mustering fifteen strong, a trumpet, a trombone, clarionets, bassoons, French horns, and a bass viol, besides singers They go the rounds of all the respectable houses, and receive contributions every Christmas, and we esteemed it a first-rate treat to hear them

After the usual carols had been sung, we set them to songs and glees Mrs Earnshaw loved the music, and, so, they gave us plenty

Catherine loved it too, but she said it sounded sweetest at the top of the steps, and she went up in the dark, I followed They shut the house door below, never noting our absence, it was so full of people She made no stay at the stair's head, but mounted farther, to the garret where Heathcliff was confined, and called him He stubbornly declined answering for a while—she persevered, and finally persuaded him to hold communion with her through the boards

I let the poor things converse unmolested, till I supposed the songs were going to cease, and the singers to get some refreshment then, I clambered up the ladder to warn her

Instead of finding her outside, I heard her voice within The little monkey had crept by the skylight of one garret, along the roof, into the skylight of the other, and it was with the utmost difficulty I could coax her out again

When she did come, Heathcliff came with her, and she insisted that I should take him into the kitchen, as my fellow-servant had gone to a neighbour's to be removed from the sound of our "devil's psalmody," as it pleased him to call it

I told them I intended, by no means, to encourage their tricks, but as the prisoner had never broken his fast since yesterday's dinner, I would wink at his cheating Mr Hindley that once

He went down, I set him a stool by the fire, and offered him a quantity of good things, but, he was sick and could eat little and my attempts to entertain him were thrown away He leant his two elbows on his knees, and his chin on his hands, and remained wrapt in dumb meditation On my inquiring the subject of his thoughts, he answered gravely—

"I'm trying to settle how I shall pay Hindley back I don't care how long I wait, if I can only do it, at last I hope he will not die before I do!"

"For shame, Heathcliff!" said I "It is for God to punish wicked people, we should learn to forgive"

"No, God won't have the satisfaction that I shall," he returned "I only wish I knew the best way! Let me alone, and I'll plan it out while I'm thinking of that, I don't feel pain"

But, Mr Lockwood, I forget these tales cannot divert you I'm annoyed how I should dream of chattering on at such a rate, and your gruel cold, and you nodding for bed! I could have told Heathcliff's history, all that you need hear, in a half-a-dozen words

Thus interrupting herself, the housekeeper rose, and proceeded to lay aside her sewing, but I felt incapable of moving from the hearth, and I was very far from nodding

"Sit still, Mrs Dean," I cried, "do sit still, another half hour! You've done just right to tell the story leisurely That is the method I like, and you must finish in the same style I am interested in every character you have mentioned, more or less"

"The clock is on the stroke of eleven, sir"

"No matter—I'm not accustomed to go to bed in the long hours One or two is early enough for a person who lies till ten"

"You shouldn't lie till ten There's the very prime of the morning gone long before that time A person who has not done one half his day's work by ten o'clock, runs a chance of leaving the other half undone "

"Nevertheless, Mrs Dean, resume your chair, because to-morrow I intend lengthening the night till afternoon I prognosticate for myself an obstinate cold, at least "

"I hope not, sir Well, you must allow me to leap over some three years, during that space, Mrs Earnshaw—"

"No, no, I'll allow nothing of the sort! Are you acquainted with the mood of mind in which, if you were seated alone, and the cat licking its kitten on the rug before you, you would watch the operation so intently that puss's neglect of one ear would put you seriously out of temper?"

"A terribly lazy mood, I should say "

"On the contrary, a tiresomely active one It is mine, at present, and, therefore, continue minutely I perceive that people in these regions acquire over people in towns the value that the spider in a dungeon does over a spider in a cottage, to their various occupants, and yet the deepened attraction is not entirely owing to the situation of the looker-on They do live more in earnest, more in themselves, and less in surface change, and frivolous external things I could fancy a love for life here almost possible, and I was a fixed unbeliever in any love of a year's standing—one state resembles setting a hungry man down to a single dish on which he may concentrate his entire appetite, and do it justice—the other, introducing him to a table laid out by French cooks, he can perhaps extract as much enjoyment from the whole, but each part is a mere atom in his regard and remembrance "

"Oh! here we are the same as anywhere else, when you get to know us," observed Mrs Dean, somewhat puzzled at my speech

"Excuse me," I responded, "you, my good friend, are a striking evidence against that assertion Excepting a few provincialisms of slight consequence, you have no marks of the manners that I am habituated to consider as peculiar to your class I am sure you have thought a great deal more than the generality of servants think You have been compelled to cultivate your reflective faculties, for want of occasions for frittering your life away in silly trifles "

Mrs Dean laughed

"I certainly esteem myself a steady, reasonable kind of body,"

she said, "not exactly from living among the hills, and seeing one set of faces, and one series of actions from year's end to year's end but I have undergone sharp discipline which has taught me wisdom, and then, I have read more than you would fancy, Mr Lockwood You could not open a book in this library that I have not looked into, and got something out of also, unless it be that range of Greek and Latin, and that of French—and those I know one from another, it is as much as you can expect of a poor man's daughter

"However, if I am to follow my story in true gossip's fashion, I had better go on, and instead of leaping three years, I will be content to pass to the next summer—the summer of 1778, that is, nearly twenty-three years ago "

---

CHAPTER VIII

---

ON THE MORNING of a fine June day, my first bonny little nursing, and the last of the ancient Earnshaw stock was born

We were busy with the hay in a far away field, when the girl that usually brought our breakfasts came running, an hour too soon, across the meadow and up the lane, calling me as she ran

"Oh, such a grand bairn!" she panted out "The finest lad that ever breathed! But the doctor says missis must go, he says she's been in a consumption these many months I heard him tell Mr Hindley—and now she has nothing to keep her, and she'll be dead before winter You must come home directly You're to nurse it, Nelly—to feed it with sugar and milk, and take care of it, day and night—I wish I were you, because it will be all yours when there is no missis!"

"But is she very ill?" I asked, flinging down my rake, and tying my bonnet

"I guess she is, yet she looks bravely," replied the girl, "and she talks as if she thought of living to see it grow a man She's out of her head for joy, it's such a beauty! If I were her I'm certain I should not die I should get better at the bare sight of it, in spite of Kenneth I was fairly mad at him Dame Archer brought the cherub down to master, in the house, and his face just began to light up, then the old croaker steps forward, and, says he —'Earnshaw, it's a blessing your wife has been spared to leave you this son When she came, I felt convinced we shouldn't keep her long, and now, I must tell you, the winter will probably finish her Don't take on, and fret about it too much, it can't be helped And besides, you should have known better than to choose such a rush of a lass' ”

“And what did the master answer?” I enquired

“I think he swore—but, I didn't mind him, I was straining to see the bairn,” and she began again to describe it rapturously I, as zealous as herself, hurried eagerly home to admire, on my part, though I was very sad for Hindley's sake, he had room in his heart only for two idols—his wife and himself—he doted on both, and adored one, and I couldn't conceive how he would bear the loss

When we got to Wuthering Heights, there he stood at the front door, and, as I passed in, I asked, “how was the baby?”

“Nearly ready to run about, Nell!” he replied, putting on a cheerful smile

“And the mistress?” I ventured to inquire, “the doctor says she's——”

“Damn the doctor!” he interrupted, reddening “Frances is quite right—she'll be perfectly well by this time next week Are you going upstairs? will you tell her that I'll come, if she'll promise not to talk I left her because she would not hold her tongue, and she must—tell her Mr Kenneth says she must be quiet ”

I delivered this message to Mrs Earnshaw, she seemed in flighty spirits, and replied merrily—

“I hardly spoke a word, Ellen, and there he has gone out twice, crying Well, say I promise I won't speak, but that does not bind me not to laugh at him!”

Poor soul! Till within a week of her death that gay heart never failed her, and her husband persisted doggedly, nay, furiously, in affirming her health improved every day When Kenneth warned him that his medicines were useless at that stage of the malady, and he needn't put him to further expense by attending her, he retorted—

“I know you need not—she's well—she does not want any more attendance from you! She never was in a consumption It was a fever, and it is gone—her pulse is as slow as mine now, and her cheek as cool ”

He told his wife the same story, and she seemed to believe him, but one night, while leaning on his shoulder, in the act of saying she thought she should be able to get up to-morrow, a fit of coughing took her—a very slight one—he raised her in his arms, she put her two hands about his neck, her face changed, and she was dead

As the girl had anticipated, the child, Hareton, fell wholly into my hands Mr Earnshaw, provided he saw him healthy, and never heard him cry, was contented, as far as regarded him For himself, he grew desperate, his sorrow was of that kind that will not lament, he neither wept nor prayed—he cursed and defied—execrated God and man, and gave himself up to reckless dissipation

The servants could not bear his tyrannical and evil conduct long Joseph and I were the only two that would stay I had not the heart to leave my charge, and besides, you know, I had been his foster sister, and excused his behaviour more readily than a stranger would

Joseph remained to hector over tenants and labourers, and because it was his vocation to be where he had plenty of wickedness to reprove

The master's bad ways and bad companions formed a pretty example for Catherine and Heathcliff His treatment of the latter was enough to make a fiend of a saint And, truly, it appeared as if the lad were possessed of something diabolical at that period He delighted to witness Hindley degrading himself past redemption, and became daily more notable for savage sullenness and ferocity

I could not half tell what an infernal house we had The curate dropped calling, and nobody decent came near us, at last, unless, Edgar Linton's visits to Miss Cathy might be an exception At fifteen she was the queen of the countryside, she had no peer and she did turn out a haughty, headstrong creature! I own I did not like her, after her infancy was past, and I vexed her frequently by trying to bring down her arrogance, she never took an aversion to me though She had a wondrous constancy to old attachments, even Heathcliff kept his hold on her affections unalterably, and young Linton, with all his superiority, found it difficult to make an equally deep impression

He was my late master, that is his portrait over the fireplace. It used to hang on one side, and his wife's on the other, but hers has been removed, or else you might see something of what she was. Can you make that out?

Mrs Dean raised the candle, and I discerned a soft-featured face, exceedingly resembling the young lady at the Heights, but more pensive and amiable in expression. It formed a sweet picture. The long light hair curled slightly on the temples, the eyes were large and serious, the figure almost too graceful. I did not marvel how Catherine Earnshaw could forget her first friend for such an individual. I marvelled much how he, with a mind to correspond with his person, could fancy my idea of Catherine Earnshaw.

"A very agreeable portrait," I observed to the housekeeper. "Is it like?"

"Yes," she answered, "but he looked better when he was animated, that is his everyday countenance, he wanted spirit in general."

Catherine had kept up her acquaintance with the Lintons since her five weeks' residence among them, and as she had no temptation to show her rough side in their company, and had the sense to be ashamed of being rude where she experienced such invariable courtesy, she imposed unwittingly on the old lady and gentleman, by her ingenious cordiality, gained the admiration of Isabella, and the heart and soul of her brother—acquisitions that flattered her from the first, for she was full of ambition—and led her to adopt a double character without exactly intending to deceive anyone.

In the place where she heard Heathcliff termed a "vulgar young ruffian," and "worse than a brute," she took care not to act like him, but at home she had small inclination to practise politeness that would only be laughed at, and restrain an unruly nature when it would bring her neither credit, nor praise.

Mr Edgar seldom mustered courage to visit Wuthering Heights openly. He had a terror of Earnshaw's reputation, and shrank from encountering him, and yet, he was always received with our best attempts at civility: the master himself, avoided offending him—knowing why he came, and if he could not be gracious, kept out of the way. I rather think his appearance there was distasteful to Catherine, she was not artful, never played the coquette, and had evidently an objection to her two friends meeting at all for when Heathcliff expressed contempt of Linton, in his presence, she could not half coincide, as she did in his absence, and when Linton evinced disgust and antipathy to Heathcliff, she dared not treat his sentiments with indifference, as if depreciation of her playmate were of scarcely any consequence to her

I've had many a laugh at her perplexities, and untold troubles, which she vainly strove to hide from my mockery That sounds ill-natured—but she was so proud, it became really impossible to pity her distresses, till she should be chastened into more humility

She did bring herself, finally, to confess, and confide in me There was not a soul else that she might fashion into an adviser

Mr Hindley had gone from home, one afternoon, and Heathcliff presumed to give himself a holiday, on the strength of it He had reached the age of sixteen then, I think, and without having bad features or being deficient in intellect, he contrived to convey an impression of inward and outward repulsiveness that his present aspect retains no traces of

In the first place, he had, by that time, lost the benefit of his early education continual hard work, begun soon and concluded late, had extinguished any curiosity he once possessed in pursuit of knowledge, and any love for books, or learning His childhood's sense of superiority, instilled into him by the favours of old Mr Earnshaw, was faded away He struggled long to keep up an equality with Catherine in her studies and yielded with poignant though silent regret but, he yielded completely, and there was no prevailing on him to take a step in the way of moving upward, when he found he must, necessarily, sink beneath his former level Then personal appearance sympathised with mental deterioration, he acquired a slouching gait, and ignoble look, his naturally reserved disposition was exaggerated into an almost idiotic excess of unsociable moroseness, and he took a grim pleasure, apparently, in exciting the aversion rather than the esteem of his few acquaintance

Catherine and he were constant companions still, at his seasons of respite from labour, but he had ceased to express his fondness for her in words, and recoiled with angry suspicion from her girlish caresses, as if conscious there could be no gratification in lavishing such marks of affection on him. On the before-named occasion he came into the house to announce his intention of doing nothing, while I was assisting Miss Cathy to arrange her dress—she had not reckoned on his taking it into his head to be idle, and imagining she would have the whole place to herself, she managed, by some means, to inform Mr Edgar of her brother's absence, and was then preparing to receive him.

"Cathy, are you busy, this afternoon?" asked Heathcliff. "Are you going anywhere?"

"No, it is raining," she answered.

"Why have you that silk frock on, then?" he said. "Nobody coming here, I hope?"

"Not that I know of," stammered Miss, "but you should be in the field now, Heathcliff. It is an hour past dinner time, I thought you were gone."

"Hindley does not often free us from his accursed presence," observed the boy. "I'll not work any more to-day, I'll stay with you."

"O, but Joseph will tell," she suggested, "you'd better go!"

"Joseph is loading lime on the farther side of Pennistow Crag, it will take him till dark, and he'll never know."

So saying he lounged to the fire, and sat down. Catherine reflected an instant, with knitted brows—she found it needful to smooth the way for an intrusion.

"Isabella, and Edgar Linton talked of calling this afternoon," she said at the conclusion of a minute's silence. "As it rains, I hardly expect them, but, they may come, and if they do, you run the risk of being scolded for no good."

"Order Ellen to say you are engaged, Cathy," he persisted, "Don't turn me out for those pitiful, silly friends of yours! I'm on the point, sometimes, of complaining that they—but I'll not——"

"That they what?" cried Catherine, gazing at him with a troubled countenance. "Oh Nelly!" she added petulantly jerking her head away from my hands, "you've combed my hair quite out of curl! That's enough, let me alone. What are you on the point of complaining about, Heathcliff?"

"Nothing—only look at the almanack, on that wall," he pointed to a framed sheet hanging near the window, and continued,

"The crosses are for the evenings you have spent with the Lintons, the dots for those spent with me—Do you see, I've marked every day?"

"Yes—very foolish, as if I took notice!" replied Catherine in a peevish tone "And where is the sense of that?"

"To show that I do take notice," said Heathcliff

"And should I always be sitting with you?" she demanded, growing more irritated "What good do I get—What do you talk about? You might be dumb or a baby for anything you say to amuse me, or for anything you do, either!"

"You never told me before that I talked too little, or that you disliked my company, Cathy!" exclaimed Heathcliff, in much agitation

"It's no company at all, when people know nothing and say nothing," she muttered

Her companion rose up, but he hadn't time to express his feelings further, for a horse's feet were heard on the flags, and, having knocked gently, young Linton entered, his face brilliant with delight at the unexpected summons he had received

Doubtless Catherine marked the difference between her friends as one came in, and the other went out The contrast resembled what you see in exchanging a bleak, hilly, coal country, for a beautiful fertile valley, and his voice, and greeting were as opposite as his aspect—He had a sweet, low manner of speaking, and pronounced his words as you do, that's less gruff than we talk here and softer

"I'm not come too soon, am I?" he said, casting a look at me I had begun to wipe the plate, and tidy some drawers at the far end in the dresser

"No," answered Catherine "What are you doing there, Nelly?"

"My work, Miss," I replied (Mr Hindley had given me directions to make a third party in any private visits Linton chose to pay)

She stepped behind me and whispered crossly, "Take yourself and your dusters off! when company are in the house, servants don't commence scouring and cleaning in the room where they are!"

"It's a good opportunity, now that master is away," I answered aloud, "he hates me to be fidgiting over these things in his presence—I'm sure Mr Edgar will excuse me"

"I hate you to be fidgiting in my presence," exclaimed the young lady imperiously, not allowing her guest time to speak—she had failed to recover her equanimity since the little dispute with Heathcliff

"I'm sorry for it, Miss Catherine!" was my response, and I proceeded assiduously with my occupation

She, supposing Edgar could not see her, snatched the cloth from my hand, and pinched me, with a prolonged wrench, very spitefully on the arm

I've said I did not love her, and rather relished mortifying her vanity, now and then, besides, she hurt me extremely, so I started up from my knees, and screamed out

"O, Miss, that's a nasty trick! You have no right to nip me, and I'm not going to bear it!"

"I didn't touch you, you lying creature!" cried she, her fingers tingling to repeat the act, and her ears red with rage. She never had power to conceal her passion, it always set her whole complexion in a blaze

"What's that then?" I retorted, showing a decided purple witness to refute her

She stamped her foot, wavered a moment, and then, irresistibly impelled by the naughty spirit within her, slapped me on the cheek a stinging blow that filled both eyes with water

"Catherine, love! Catherine!" interposed Linton, greatly shocked at the double fault of falsehood, and violence which his idol had committed

"Leave the room, Ellen!" she repeated, trembling all over

Little Hareton, who followed me everywhere, and was sitting near me on the floor, at seeing my tears commenced crying himself, and sobbed out complaints against "wicked aunt Cathy," which drew her fury on to his unlucky head. She seized his shoulders, and shook him till the poor child waxed livid, and Edgar thoughtlessly laid hold of her hand to deliver him. In an instant one was wrung free, and the astonished young man felt it applied over his own ear in a way that could not be mistaken for jest

He drew back in consternation—I lifted Hareton in my arms, and walked off to the kitchen with him, leaving the door of communication open, for I was curious to watch how they would settle their disagreement

The insulted visitor moved to the spot where he had laid his hat, pale and with a quivering lip

"That's right!" I said to myself, "Take warning and begone! It's a kindness to let you have a glimpse of her genuine disposition"

"Where are you going?" demanded Catherine, advancing to the door

He swerved aside and attempted to pass

"You must not go!" she exclaimed energetically

"I must and shall!" he replied in a subdued voice

"No," she persisted, grasping the handle, "not yet, Edgar Linton—sit down, you shall not leave me in that temper I should be miserable all night, and I won't be miserable for you!"

"Can I stay after you have struck me?" asked Linton

Catherine was mute

"You've made me afraid, and ashamed of you," he continued, "I'll not come here again!"

Her eyes began to glisten and her lids to twinkle

"And you told a deliberate untruth!" he said

"I didn't!" she cried, recovering her speech "I did nothing deliberately—Well, go, if you please—get away! And now I'll cry—I'll cry myself sick!"

She dropped down on her knees by a chair and set to weeping in a serious earnest

Edgar persevered in his resolution as far as the court, there, he lingered I resolved to encourage him

"Miss is dreadfully wayward, sir!" I called out "As bad as any marred child—you'd better be riding home, or else she will be sick, only to grieve us"

The soft thing looked askance through the window—he possessed the power to depart, as much as a cat possesses the power to leave a mouse half killed, or a bird half eaten

Ah, I thought, there will be no saving him—He's doomed, and flies to his fate!

And so it was, he turned abruptly, hastened into the house again, shut the door behind him, and, when I went in a while after to inform them that Earnshaw had come home rabid drunk, ready to pull the old place about our ears, (his ordinary frame of mind in that condition) I saw the quarrel had merely effected a closer intimacy—had broken the outworks of youthful timidity, and enabled them to forsake the disguise of friendship, and confess themselves lovers

Intelligence of Mr Hindley's arrival drove Linton speedily to his horse, and Catherine to her chamber I went to hide little Hareton, and to take the shot out of the master's fowling piece which he was fond of playing with in his insane excitement, to the hazard of the lives of any who provoked, or even attracted his notice too much, and I had hit upon the plan of removing it, that he might do less mischief, if he did go the length of firing the gun

---

CHAPTER IX

---

HE ENTERED, vociferating oaths dreadful to hear, and caught me in the act of stowing his son away in the kitchen cupboard. Hareton was impressed with a wholesome terror of encountering either his wild-beast's fondness, or his madman's rage—for in one he ran a chance of being squeezed and kissed to death, and in the other of being flung into the fire, or dashed against the wall—and the poor thing remained perfectly quiet wherever I chose to put him.

"There I've found it out at last!" cried Hindley, pulling me back by the skin of the neck, like a dog. "By Heaven and Hell, you've sworn between you to murder that child! I know how it is, now, that he is always out of my way. But, with the help of Satan, I shall make you swallow the carving knife, Nelly! you needn't laugh, for I've just crammed Kenneth, head-downmost, in the Blackhorse marsh and two is the same as one—and I want to kill some of you, I shall have no rest till I do!"

"But I don't like the carving-knife, Mr Hindley," I answered, "it has been cutting iced herrings—I'd rather be shot if you please."

"You'd rather be damned!" he said, "and so you shall—No law in England can hinder a man from keeping his house decent, and mine's abominable! open your mouth."

He held the knife in his hand, and pushed its point between my teeth but, for my part I was never much afraid of his vagaries. I spat out, and affirmed it tasted detestably—I would not take it on any account.

"Oh!" said he releasing me, "I see that hideous little villain is not Hareton—I beg your pardon, Nell—if it be, he deserves flaying alive for not running to welcome me, and for screaming as if I were a goblin. Unnatural cub, come hither! I'll teach thee to impose on a good-hearted, deluded father—Now, don't you think the lad would be handsomer cropped? It makes a dog fiercer, and I love something fierce—Get me a scissors—something fierce and trim! Besides, it's infernal affectation—devilish conceit, it is, to cherish our ears—we're asses enough without them Hush, child, hush! well then, it is my darling! wisht, dry thy eyes—there's a joy, kiss me, what, it won't? kiss me, Hareton! Damn thee, kiss me! By God, as if I would rear such a monster! As sure as I'm living, I'll break the brat's neck ”

Poor Hareton was squalling and kicking in his father's arms with all his might, and redoubled his yells when he carried him up-stairs and lifted him over the bannister I cried out that he would frighten the child into fits, and ran to rescue him

As I reached them, Hindley leant forward on the rails to listen to a noise below, almost forgetting what he had in his hands

“Who is that?” he asked, hearing some one approaching the stair's-foot

I leant forward, also, for the purpose of signing to Heathcliff, whose step I recognized, not to come further, and, at the instant when my eye quitted Hareton, he gave a sudden spring, delivered himself from the careless grasp that held him, and fell

There was scarcely time to experience a thrill of horror before he saw that the little wretch was safe Heathcliff arrived underneath just at the critical moment, by a natural impulse, he arrested his descent, and setting him on his feet, looked up to discover the author of the accident

A miser who has parted with a lucky lottery ticket for five shillings and finds next day he has lost in the bargain five thousand pounds, could not show a blanker countenance than he did on beholding the figure of Mr Earnshaw above—It expressed, plainer than words could do, the intensest anguish at having made himself the instrument of thwarting his own revenge Had it been dark, I dare say, he would have tried to remedy the mistake by smashing Hareton's skull on the steps, but, we witnessed his salvation, and I was presently below with my precious charge pressed to my heart

Hindley descended more leisurely, sobered and abashed

“It is your fault, Ellen,” he said, “you should have kept him out of sight, you should have taken him from me! Is he injured anywhere?”

“Injured!” I cried, angrily, “If he's not killed, he'll be an idiot!”

Oh! I wonder his mother does not rise from her grave to see how you use him You're worse than a heathen—treating your own flesh and blood in that manner!"

He attempted to touch the child, who on finding himself with me sobbed off his terror directly At the first finger his father laid on him, however, he shrieked again louder than before, and struggled as if he would go into convulsions

"You shall not meddle with him!" I continued, "He hates you—they all hate you—that's the truth! A happy family you have, and a pretty state you've come to!"

"I shall come to a prettier, yet! Nelly," laughed the misguided man, recovering his hardness "At present, convey yourself and him away—And, hark you, Heathcliff! clear you too, quite from my reach and hearing I wouldn't murder you to-night, unless, perhaps, I set the house on fire, but that's as my fancy goes—"

While saying this he took a pint bottle of brandy from the dresser, and poured some into a tumbler

"Nay don't!" I entreated, "Mr Hindley, do take warning Have mercy on this unfortunate boy, if you care nothing for yourself!"

"Any one will do better for him than I shall," he answered

"Have mercy on your own soul!" I said, endeavouring to snatch the glass from his hand

"Not I! On the contrary, I shall have great pleasure in sending it to perdition, to punish its maker," exclaimed the blasphemer, "Here's to its hearty damnation!"

He drank the spirits, and impatiently bade us go, terminating his command with a sequel of horrid imprecations, too bad to repeat, or remember

"It's a pity he cannot kill himself with drink," observed Heathcliff, muttering an echo of curses back when the door was shut "He's doing his very utmost, but his constitution defies him—Mr Kenneth says he would wager his mare, that he'll outlive any man on this side Gimmerton, and go to the grave a hoary sinner, unless, some happy chance out of the common course befall him"

I went into the kitchen and sat down to lull my little lamb to sleep Heathcliff, as I thought, walked through to the barn It turned out, afterwards, that he only got as far as the other side the settle, when he flung himself on a bench by the wall, removed from the fire, and remained silent

I was rocking Hareton on my knee, and humming a song that began,

"It was far in the night, and the bairnies grat,
The mither beneath the mools heard that."

when Miss Cathy, who had listened to the hubbub from her room, put her head in, and whispered,

"Are you alone, Nelly?"

"Yes, Miss," I replied

She entered and approached the hearth I, supposing she was going to say something, looked up The expression of her face seemed disturbed and anxious Her lips were half asunder as if she meant to speak, and she drew a breath, but it escaped in a sigh, instead of a sentence

I resumed my song not having forgotten her recent behaviour

"Where's Heathcliff?" she said, interrupting me

"About his work in the stable," was my answer

He did not contradict me, perhaps, he had fallen into a doze There followed another long pause, during which I perceived a drop or two trickle from Catherine's cheek to the flags

"Is she sorry for her shameful conduct?" I asked myself "That will be a novelty, but she may come to the point as she will—I shan't help her!"

No, she felt small trouble regarding any subject, save her own concerns

"Oh, dear!" she cried at last "I'm very unhappy!"

"A pity," observed I, "you're hard to please—so many friends and so few cares, and can't make yourself content!"

"Nelly, will you keep a secret for me?" she pursued, kneeling down by me, and lifting her winsome eyes to my face with that sort of look which turns off bad temper, even, when one has all the right in the world to indulge it

"Is it worth keeping?" I inquired, less sulkily

"Yes, and it worries me, and I must let it out! I want to know what I should do—To-day, Edgar Linton has asked me to marry him, and I've given him an answer—Now, before I tell you whether it was a consent, or denial—you tell me which it ought to have been"

"Really, Miss Catherine, how can I know?" I replied "To be sure, considering the exhibition you performed in his presence, this afternoon, I might say it would be wise to refuse him—since he asked you after that, he must either be hopelessly stupid, or a venturesome fool”

“If you talk so, I won’t tell you any more,” she returned, peevishly, rising to her feet “I accepted him, Nelly, be quick, and say whether I was wrong!”

“You accepted him? then, what good is it discussing the matter? You have pledged your word, and cannot retract”

“But, say whether I should have done so—do!” she exclaimed in an irritated tone, chafing her hands together, and frowning

“There are many things to be considered, before that question can be answered properly,” I said sententiously, “first and foremost, do you love Mr Edgar?”

“Who can help it? Of course I do,” she answered

Then I put her through the following catechism—for a girl of twenty-two it was not injudicious

“Why do you love him, Miss Cathy?”

“Nonsense, I do—that’s sufficient”

“By no means, you must say why?”

“Well, because he is handsome, and pleasant to be with”

“Bad,” was my commentary

“And because he is young and cheerful”

“Bad, still”

“And, because he loves me”

“Indifferent, coming there”

“And he will be rich, and I shall like to be the greatest woman of the neighbourhood, and I shall be proud of having such a husband”

“Worst of all! And, now, say how you love him?”

“As anybody loves—You’re silly, Nelly”

“Not at all—Answer”

“I love the ground under his feet, and the air over his head, and everything he touches, and every word he says—I love all his looks, and all his actions, and him entirely, and altogether There now!”

“And why?”

“Nay—you are making a jest of it, it is exceedingly ill-natured! It’s no jest to me!” said the young lady scowling, and turning her face to the fire

“I’m very far from jesting, Miss Catherine,” I replied, “you love Mr Edgar, because he is handsome, and young, and cheerful, and rich, and loves you The last, however, goes for nothing—

You would love him without that, probably, and with it, you wouldn't unless he possessed the four former attractions "

"No, to be sure not—I should only pity him—hate him, perhaps, if he were ugly, and a clown "

"But, there are several other handsome, rich young men in the world, handsomer, possibly, and richer than he is—What should hinder you from loving them?"

"If there be any, they are out of my way—I've seen none like Edgar "

"You may see some, and he won't always be handsome, and young, and may not always be rich "

"He is now, and I have only to do with the present—I wish you would speak rationally "

"Well, that settles it—if you have only to do with the present, marry Mr Linton "

"I don't want your permission for that—I shall marry him, and yet, you have not told me whether I'm right "

"Perfectly right, if people be right to marry only for the present And now, let us hear what you are unhappy about Your brother will be pleased The old lady and gentleman will not object, I think—you will escape from a disorderly, comfortless home into a wealthy respectable one, and you love Edgar, and Edgar loves you All seems smooth and easy—where is the obstacle?"

"Here! and here!" replied Catherine, striking one hand on her forehead, and the other on her breast "In whichever place the soul lives—in my soul, and in my heart, I'm convinced I'm wrong!"

"That is very strange! I cannot make it out "

"It's my secret, but if you will not mock at me, I'll explain it, I can't do it distinctly—but I'll give you a feeling of how I feel "

She seated herself by me again her countenance grew sadder and graver, and her clasped hands trembled

"Nelly, do you never dream queer dreams?" she said, suddenly, after some minutes' reflection

"Yes, now and then," I answered

"And so do I I've dreamt in my life dreams that have stayed with me ever after, and changed my ideas, they've gone through and through me, like wine through water, and altered the colour of my mind And this is one—I'm going to tell it—but take care not to smile at any part of it "

"Oh! don't, Miss Catherine!" I cried "We're dismal enough without conjuring up ghosts, and visions to perplex us Come, come, be merry, and like yourself! Look at little Hareton—he's dreaming nothing dreary How sweetly he smiles in his sleep!"

"Yes, and how sweetly his father curses in his solitude! You remember him, I dare say, when he was just such another as that chubby thing—nearly as young and innocent However, Nelly, I shall oblige you to listen—it's not long, and I've no power to be merry to-night"

"I won't hear it, I won't hear it!" I repeated, hastily

I was superstitious about dreams then, and am still, and Catherine had an unusual gloom in her aspect, that made me dread something from which I might shape a prophecy, and foresee a fearful catastrophe

She was vexed, but she did not proceed Apparently taking up another subject, she re-commenced in a short time

"If I were in heaven, Nelly, I should be extremely miserable"

"Because you are not fit to go there," I answered "All sinners would be miserable in heaven"

"But it is not for that I dreamt, once, that I was there"

"I tell you I won't hearken to your dreams, Miss Catherine! I'll go to bed," I interrupted again

She laughed, and held me down, for I made a motion to leave my chair

"This is nothing," cried she, "I was only going to say that heaven did not seem to be my home, and I broke my heart with weeping to come back to earth, and the angels were so angry that they flung me out, into the middle of the heath on the top of Wuthering Heights, where I woke sobbing for joy That will do to explain my secret, as well as the other I've no more business to marry Edgar Linton than I have to be in heaven, and if the wicked man in there, had not brought Heathcliff so low I shouldn't have thought of it It would degrade me to marry Heathcliff, now, so he shall never know how I love him, and that, not because he's handsome, Nelly, but because he's more myself than I am Whatever our souls are made of, his and mine are the same, and Linton's is as different as a moonbeam from lightning, or frost from fire"

Ere this speech ended, I became sensible of Heathcliff's presence Having noticed a slight movement, I turned my head, and saw him rise from the bench, and steal out, noiselessly He had listened till he heard Catherine say it would degrade her to marry him, and then he stayed to hear no farther

My companion, sitting on the ground, was prevented by the back of the settle from remarking his presence or departure, but I started, and bade her hush

"Why?" she asked, gazing nervously round

"Joseph is here," I answered, catching, opportunely, the roll of his cartwheels up the road, "and Heathcliff will come in with him I'm not sure whether he were not at the door this moment"

"Oh, he couldn't overhear me at the door!" said she "Give me Hareton, while you get the supper, and when it is ready ask me to sup with you I want to cheat my uncomfortable conscience, and be convinced that Heathcliff has no notion of these things—he has not, has he? He does not know what being in love is?"

"I see no reason that he should not know, as well as you," I returned, "and if you are his choice, he'll be the most unfortunate creature that ever was born! As soon as you become Mrs Linton, he loses friend, and love, and all! Have you considered how you'll bear the separation, and how he'll bear to be quite deserted in the world? Because, Miss Catherine——"

"He quite deserted! we separated!" she exclaimed, with an accent of indignation "Who is to separate us, pray? They'll meet the fate of Milo! Not as long as I live, Ellen—for no mortal creature Every Linton on the face of the earth might melt into nothing, before I could consent to forsake Heathcliff Oh, that's not what I intend—that's not what I mean! I shouldn't be Mrs Linton were such a price demanded! He'll be as much to me as he has been all his lifetime Edgar must shake off his antipathy, and tolerate him, at least He will when he learns my true feelings towards him Nelly, I see now, you think me a selfish wretch, but, did it never strike you that, if Heathcliff and I married, we should be beggars? whereas, if I marry Linton, I can aid Heathcliff to rise, and place him out of my brother's power"

"With your husband's money, Miss Catherine?" I asked "You'll find him not so pliable as you calculate upon and, though I'm hardly a judge, I think that's the worst motive you've given yet for being the wife of young Linton"

"It is not," retorted she, "it is the best! The others were the satisfaction of my whims, and for Edgar's sake, too, to satisfy him This is for the sake of one who comprehends in his person my feelings to Edgar and myself I cannot express it, but surely you and everybody have a notion that there is, or should be an existence of yours beyond you. What were the use of creation if I were entirely contained here? My great miseries in this world have been Heathcliff's miseries, and I watched and felt each from the beginning, my great thought in living is himself. If all else perished, and he remained, I should still continue to be, and if all else remained, and he were annihilated, the Universe would turn to a mighty stranger. I should not seem a part of it. My love for Linton is like the foliage in the woods: Time will change it, I'm well aware, as winter changes the trees—my love for Heathcliff resembles the eternal rocks beneath—a source of little visible delight, but necessary. Nelly, I am Heathcliff—he's always, always in my mind—not as a pleasure, any more than I am always a pleasure to myself—but, as my own being—so, don't talk of our separation again—it is impracticable, and——”

She paused, and hid her face in the folds of my gown, but I jerked it forcibly away. I was out of patience with her folly!

“If I can make any sense out of your nonsense, Miss,” I said, “it only goes to convince me that you are ignorant of the duties you undertake in marrying, or else, that you are a wicked, unprincipled girl. But trouble me with no more secrets. I'll not promise to keep them.”

“You'll keep that?” she asked, eagerly.

“No, I'll not promise,” I repeated.

She was about to insist, when the entrance of Joseph finished our conversation, and Catherine removed her seat to a corner, and nursed Hareton, while I made the supper.

After it was cooked, my fellow servant and I began to quarrel who should carry some to Mr Hindley, and we didn't settle it till all was nearly cold. Then we came to the agreement that we would let him ask, if he wanted any, for we feared particularly to go into his presence when he had been for some time alone.

“Und hah isn't that nowt comed in frough th' field, be this time? What is he abaht? girt eedle seeght!” demanded the old man, looking round for Heathcliff.

“I'll call him,” I replied. “He's in the barn, I've no doubt.”

I went and called, but got no answer. On returning, I whispered to Catherine that he had heard a good part of what she said, I was sure, and told her how I saw him quit the kitchen just as she complained of her brother's conduct regarding him.

She jumped up in a fine fright—flung Hareton onto the settle, and ran to seek for her friend herself, not taking leisure to consider why she was so flurried, or how her talk would have affected him

She was absent such a while that Joseph proposed that we should wait no longer. He cunningly conjectured that they were staying away in order to avoid hearing his protracted blessing. They were "ill enough for any fahl manners," he affirmed. And, on their behalf, he added that night a special prayer to the usual quarter of an hour's supplication before meat, and would have tacked another to the end of the grace, had not his young mistress broken in upon him with a hurried command, that he must run down the road, and, wherever Heathcliff had rambled, find and make him re-enter directly!

"I want to speak to him, and I must, before I go upstairs," she said. "And the gate is open, he is somewhere out of hearing, for he would not reply, though I shouted at the top of the fold as loud as I could."

Joseph objected at first, she was too much in earnest, however, to suffer contradiction, and, at last, he placed his hat on his head, and walked grumbling forth.

Meantime Catherine paced up and down the floor, exclaiming—

"I wonder where he is—I wonder where he can be! What did I say, Nelly? I've forgotten. Was he vexed at my bad humour this afternoon? Dear! tell me what I've said to grieve him? I do wish he'd come. I do wish he would!"

"What a noise for nothing!" I cried, though rather uneasy myself. "What a trifle scares you! It's surely no great cause of alarm that Heathcliff should take a moonlight saunter on the moors, or, even lie too sulky to speak to us, in the hay-loft. I'll engage he's lurking there. See, if I don't ferret him out!"

I departed to renew my search, its result was disappointment, and Joseph's quest ended in the same.

"Yon lad gets war un war!" observed he on re-entering. "He's left th' yate ut t' full swing, and miss's pony has trodden dahn two rigs uh corn, un plottered through, raight o'er intuh t' meadow! Hahsomdive, t' maister 'ull play t' devil to-morn, and he'll do weel. He's patience ittsehn wí' sich careless, offald craters—patience ittsehn he is! Bud he'll not be soa allus—yah's see, all on ye! Yah mumn't drive him aht uf his heead fur nowt!"

"Have you found Heathcliff, you ass?" interrupted Catherine. "Have you been looking for him, as I ordered?"

"Aw sud more likker look for th' horse," he replied. "It 'ud be tuh more sense Bud, Aw can look for norther horse, nur man uf a neeght loike this—as black as t' chumbley<sup>1</sup> und Hathecliff's noan t' chap tuh coom at marw whistle—happen he'll be less hard uh hearing wi' ye!"

It was a vey dark evening for summer the clouds appeared inclined to thunder, and I said we had better all sit down, the approaching rain would be certain to bring him home without further trouble

However, Catherine would not be persuaded into tranquillity She kept wandering to and fro, from the gate to the door, in a state of agitation, which permitted no repose and, at length, took up a permanent situation on one side of the wall, near the road, where, heedless of my expostulations, and the growling thunder, and the great drops that began to plash around her, she remained calling, at intervals, and then listening, and then crying outright She beat Hareton, or any child, at a good, passionate fit of crying

About midnight, while we still sat up, the storm came rattling over the Heights in full fury There was a violent wind, as well as thunder, and either one or the other split a tree off at the corner of the building, a huge bough fell across the roof, and knocked down a portion of the east chimney-stack, sending a clatter of stones and soot into the kitchen fire

We thought a bolt had fallen in the middle of us, and Joseph swung onto his knees, beseeching the Lord to remember the patriarchs Noah and Lot, and, as in former times, spare the righteous, though he smote the ungodly I felt some sentiment that it must be a judgment on us also The Jonah, in my mind, was Mr Earnshaw, and I shook the handle of his den that I might ascertain if he were yet living He replied audibly enough, in a fashion which made my companion vociferate more clamorously than before that a wide distinction might be drawn between saints like himself, and sinners like his master But, the uproar passed away in twenty minutes, leaving us all unharmed, excepting Cathy, who got thoroughly drenched for her obstinacy in refusing to take shelter, and standing bonnetless and shawless to catch as much water as she could with her hair and clothes

She came in, and lay down on the settle, all soaked as she was, turning her face to the back, and putting her hands before it

"Well, Miss!" I exclaimed, touching her shoulder "You are not bent on getting your death, are you? Do you know what o'clock it is? Half-past twelve Come! come to bed, there's no use waiting longer on that foolish boy—he'll be gone to Gimmerton, and he'll stay there now He guesses we shouldn't wake for him till this late hour, at least, he guesses that only Mr Hindley would be up, and he'd rather avoid having the door opened by the master "

"Nay, nay, he's noan at Gimmerton!" said Joseph "Aw's niver wonder, bud he's at t'bothom uf a bog-hoile This visitation worn't for nowt, und Aw wod hev ye tuh look aht, Miss,—yah muh be t' next Thank Hivin for all! All warks togither for gooid tuh them as is choozen, and piked aht froo' th' rubbidge! Yah know whet t' Scripture ses—"

And he began quoting several texts, referring us to the chapters and verses, where we might find them

I having vainly begged the wilful girl to rise and remove her wet things, left him preaching, and her shivering, and betook myself to bed with little Hareton, who slept as fast as if every one had been sleeping round him

I heard Joseph read on a while afterwards, then, I distinguished his slow step on the ladder, and then I dropt asleep

Coming down somewhat later than usual, I saw, by the sunbeams piercing the chinks of the shutters, Miss Catherine still seated near the fire-place The house-door was ajar, too, light entered from its unclosed windows, Hindley had come out, and stood on the kitchen hearth, haggard, and drowsy

"What ails you, Cathy?" he was saying when I entered, "You look as dismal as a drowned whelp—Why are you so damp and pale, child?"

"I've been wet," she answered reluctantly, "and I'm cold, that's all "

"Oh, she is naughty!" I cried, perceiving the master to be tolerably sober, "she got steeped in the shower of yesterday evening, and there she has sat, the night through, and I couldn't prevail on her to stir "

Mr Earnshaw stared at us in surprise "The night through," he repeated "What kept her up, not fear of the thunder, surely? That was over, hours since "

Neither of us wished to mention Heathcliff's absence, as long as we could conceal it, so, I replied, I didn't know how she took it into her head to sit up, and she said nothing

The morning was fresh and cool, I threw back the lattice, and presently the room filled with sweet scents from the garden but Catherine called peevishly to me

"Ellen, shut the window I'm starving!" And her teeth chattered as she shrunk closer to the almost extinguished embers

"She's ill—" said Hindley, taking her wrist, "I suppose that's the reason she would not go to bed—Damn it! I don't want to be troubled with more sickness, here—What took you into the rain!"

"Running after t' lads, as usual!" croaked Joseph, catching an opportunity, from our hesitation, to thrust in his evil tongue

"If Aw wur yah, maister, Aw'd just slam t' boards i' their faces all on 'em, gentle and simple! Never a day ut yah're off, but yon cat uh Linton comes sneaking hither—and Miss Nelly, shoo's a fine lass! shoo sits watching for ye i' t' kitchen, and as yah're in at one door, he's aht at t' other—Und, then, wer grand lady goes a coorting uf hor side! It's bonny behaviour, lurking amang t' fields, after twelve ut' night, wi' that fahl, flaysome divil of a gipsy, Heathcliff! They think Aw'm blind, but Aw'm noan, now't ut t' soart! Aw seed young Linton, boath coming and going, and Aw seed yah (directing his discouise to me) Yah gooid fur nowt, slattenly witch! nip up und bolt intuh th' hahs, t' minute yah heard t' maister's horse fit clatter up t' road "

"Silence, eavesdropper!" cried Catherine, "None of your insolence, before me! Edgar Linton came yesterday, by chance, Hindley and it was I who told him to be off because, I knew you would not like to have met him as you were "

"You lie, Cathy, no doubt," answered her brother, "and you are a confounded simpleton! But, never mind Linton, at present—Tell me, were you not with Heathcliff, last night? Speak the truth now You need not be afraid of harming him—Though I hate him as much as ever, he did me a good turn, a short time since, that will make my conscience tender of breaking his neck To prevent it, I shall send him about his business, this very morning, and after he's gone, I'd advise you all to look sharp, I shall only have the more humour for you!"

"I never saw Heathcliff last night," answered Catherine, beginning to sob bitterly "and if you do turn him out of doors, I'll go with him But, perhaps, you'll never have an opportunity—perhaps, he's gone " Here she burst into uncontrollable grief, and the remainder of her words were inarticulate

Hindley lavished on her a torrent of scornful abuse, and bade her get to her room immediately, or she shouldn't cry for nothing!

I obliged her to obey, and I shall never forget what a scene she acted, when we reached her chamber. It terrified me—I thought she was going mad, and I begged Joseph to run for the doctor.

It proved the commencement of delirium, Mr. Kenneth, as soon as he saw her, pronounced her dangerously ill, she had a fever.

He bled her, and he told me to let her live on whey, and water gruel, and take care she did not throw herself down stairs, or out of the window, and then he left, for, he had enough to do in the parish where two or three miles was the ordinary distance between cottage and cottage.

Though I cannot say I made a gentle nurse, and Joseph and the master were no better, and though our patient was as wearisome and headstrong as a patient could be, she weathered it through.

Old Mrs. Linton paid us several visits, to be sure, and set things to rights, and scolded, and ordered us all, and when Catherine was convalescent, she insisted on conveying her to Thrushcross Grange, for which deliverance we were very grateful. But, the poor dame had reason to repent of her kindness, she, and her husband, both took the fever, and died within a few days of each other.

Our young lady returned to us, saucier, and more passionate, and haughtier than ever. Heathcliff had never been heard of since the evening of the thunder-storm, and, one day, I had the misfortune, when she had provoked me exceedingly, to lay the blame of his disappearance on her (where indeed it belonged, as she well knew). From that period for several months, she ceased to hold any communication with me save in the relation of a mere servant. Joseph fell under a ban also, he would speak his mind, and lecture her all the same as if she were a little girl, and she esteemed herself a woman, and our mistress, and thought that her recent illness gave her a claim to be treated with consideration. Then the doctor had said that she would not bear crossing much, she ought to have her own way, and it was nothing less than murder, in her eyes, for any one to presume to stand up and contradict her.

From Mr. Earnshaw and his companions she kept aloof, and tutored by Kenneth, and serious threats of a fit that often attended her rages, her brother allowed her whatever she pleased to demand, and generally avoided aggravating her fiery temper. He was rather too indulgent in humouring her caprices, not from affection, but from pride, he wished earnestly to see her bring honour to the family by an alliance with the Lintons, and, as long as she let him alone, she might trample us like slaves, for aught he cared!

Edgar Linton, as multitudes have been before, and will be after him, was infatuated, and believed himself the happiest man alive on the day he led her to Gimmerton Chapel, three years subsequent to his father's death.

Much against my inclination, I was persuaded to leave Wuthering Heights and accompany her here. Little Hareton was nearly five years old, and I had just begun to teach him his letters. We made a sad parting, but Catherine's tears were more powerful than ours—When I refused to go, and when she found her entreaties did not move me, she went lamenting to her husband, and brother. The former offered me munificent wages, the latter ordered me to pack up—he wanted no women in the house, he said, now that there was no mistress, and as to Hareton, the curate should take him in hand, by and bye. And so, I had but one choice left, to do as I was ordered—I told the master he got rid of all decent people only to run to ruin a little faster, I kissed Hareton goodbye, and, since then, he has been a stranger, and it's very queer to think it, but I've no doubt, he has completely forgotten all about Ellen Dean and that he was ever more than all the world to her, and she to him!

At this point of the housekeeper's story, she chanced to glance towards the time-piece over the chimney, and was in amazement, on seeing the minute-hand measure half past one. She would not hear of staying a second longer—In truth, I felt rather disposed to defer the sequel of her narrative, myself; and now, that she is vanished to her rest, and I have meditated for another hour or two, I shall summon courage to go, also, in spite of aching laziness of head and limbs.

---

CHAPTER X

---

A CHARMING introduction to a hermit's life! Four week's torture, tossing and sickness! Oh, these bleak winds, and bitter, northern skies, and impassable roads, and dilatory country surgeons! And, oh, this dearth of the human physiognomy, and, worse than all, the terrible intimation of Kenneth that I need not expect to be out of doors till spring!

Mr Heathcliff has just honoured me with a call About seven days ago he sent me a brace of grouse—the last of the season Scoundrel! He is not altogether guiltless in this illness of mine, and that I had a great mind to tell him But, alas! how could I offend a man who was charitable enough to sit at my bedside a good hour, and talk on some other subject than pills, and draughts, blisters, and leeches?

This is quite an easy interval I am too weak to read, yet I feel as if I could enjoy something interesting Why not have up Mrs Dean to finish her tale? I can recollect its chief incidents, as far as she had gone Yes, I remember her hero had run off, and never been heard of for three years and the heroine was married I'll ring, she'll be delighted to find me capable of talking cheerfully

Mrs Dean came

"It wants twenty minutes, sir, to taking the medicine," she commenced

"Away, away with it!" I replied, "I desire to have—"

"The doctor says you must drop the powders"

"With all my heart! Don't interrupt me Come and take your seat here Keep your fingers from that bitter phalanx of vials Draw your knitting out of your pocket—that will do—now continue the history of Mr Heathcliff, from where you left off, to the present day Did he finish his education on the Continent, and come back a gentleman? or did he get a sizer's place at college? or escape to America, and earn honours by drawing blood from his foster country? or make a fortune more promptly, on the English highways?"

"He may have done a little in all these vocations, Mr Lockwood, but I couldn't give my word for any I stated before that I didn't know how he gained his money, neither am I aware of the means he took to raise his mind from the savage ignorance into which it was sunk, but, with your leave, I'll proceed in my own fashion, if you think it will amuse, and not weary you Are you feeling better this morning?"

"Much"

"That's good news"

I got Miss Catherine and myself to Thrushcross Grange and, to my agreeable disappointment, she behaved infinitely better than I dared to expect. She seemed almost over fond of Mr Linton, and even to his sister, she showed plenty of affection. They were both very attentive to her comfort, certainly. It was not the thorn bending to the honeysuckles, but the honeysuckles embracing the thorn. There were no mutual concessions, one stood erect, and the other yielded, and who can be ill-natured, and bad-tempered, when they encounter neither opposition, nor indifference?

I observed that Mr Edgar had a deep-rooted fear of ruffling her humour. He concealed it from her, but if ever he heard me answer sharply, or saw any other servant grow cloudy at some imperious order of hers, he would show his trouble by a frown of displeasure that never darkened on his own account. He, many a time, spoke sternly to me about my pertness, and averred that the stab of a knife could not inflict a worse pang than he suffered at seeing his lady vexed.

Not to grieve a kind master I learned to be less touchy, and, for the space of half a year, the gunpowder lay as harmless as sand, because no fire came near to explode it. Catherine had seasons of gloom and silence, now and then they were respected with sympathizing silence by her husband, who ascribed them to an alteration in her constitution, produced by her perilous illness, as she was never subject to depression of spirits before. The return of sunshine was welcomed by answering sunshine from him. I believe I may assert that they were really in possession of deep and growing happiness.

It ended. Well, we must be for ourselves in the long run, the mild and generous are only more justly selfish than the domineering—and it ended when circumstances caused each to feel that the one's interest was not the chief consideration in the other's thoughts.

On a mellow evening in September, I was coming from the garden with a heavy basket of apples which I had been gathering. It had got dusk, and the moon looked over the high wall of the court, causing undefined shadows to lurk in the corners of the numerous projecting portions of the building. I set my burden on the house steps by the kitchen door, and lingered to rest, and draw in a few more breaths of the soft, sweet air, my eyes were on the moon, and my back to the entrance, when I heard a voice behind me say—

"Nelly, is that you?"

It was a deep voice, and foreign in tone, yet, there was something in the manner of pronouncing my name which made it sound familiar. I turned about to discover who spoke, fearfully, for the doors were shut, and I had seen nobody on approaching the steps.

Something stirred in the porch, and moving nearer, I distinguished a tall man dressed in dark clothes, with dark face and hair. He leant against the side, and held his fingers on the latch, as if intending to open for himself.

"Who can it be?" I thought. "Mr Earnshaw? Oh, no! The voice has no resemblance to his."

"I have waited here an hour," he resumed, while I continued staring, "and the whole of that time all round has been as still as death. I dared not enter. You do not know me? Look, I'm not a stranger!"

A ray fell on his features, the cheeks were sallow, and half covered with black whiskers, the brows lowering, the eyes deep set and singular. I remembered the eyes.

"What!" I cried, uncertain whether to regard him as a worldly visitor, and I raised my hands in amazement. "What! you come back? Is it really you? Is it?"

"Yes, Heathcliff," he replied, glancing from me up to the windows which reflected a score of glittering moons, but showed no lights from within. "Are they at home—where is she? Nelly, you are not glad—you needn't be so disturbed. Is she here? Speak! I want to have one word with her—your mistress. Go, and say some person from Gimmerton desires to see her."

"How will she take it?" I exclaimed, "what will she do? The surprise bewilders me—it will put her out of her head! And you are Heathcliff? But altered! Nay, there's no comprehending it. Have you been for a soldier?"

"Go, and carry my message," he interrupted impatiently. "I'm in hell till you do!"

He lifted the latch, and I entered, but when I got to the parlour where Mr and Mrs Linton were, I could not persuade myself to proceed.

At length, I resolved on making an excuse to ask if they would have the candles lighted, and I opened the door.

They sat together in a window whose lattice lay back against the wall, and displayed beyond the garden trees, and the wild green park, the valley of Gimmerton, with a long line of mist winding nearly to its top (for very soon after you pass the chapel, as you may have noticed, the sough that runs from the marshes joins a beck which follows the bend of the glen) Wuthering Heights rose above this silvery vapour, but our old house was invisible—it rather dips down on the other side

Both the room, and its occupants, and the scene they gazed on, looked wondrously peaceful I shrank reluctantly from performing my errand and was actually going away, leaving it unsaid, after having put my question about the candles, when a sense of my folly compelled me to return, and mutter

“A person from Gimmerton wishes to see you, ma’am ”

“What does he want?” asked Mrs Linton

“I did not question him,” I answered

“Well, close the curtains, Nell,” she said, “and bring up tea I’ll be back again directly ”

She quitted the apartment, Mr Edgar inquired, carelessly, who it was?

“Some one mistress does not expect,” I replied “That Heathcliff, you recollect him, sir, who used to live at Mr Earnshaw’s ”

“What, the gipsy—the ploughboy?” he cried “Why did you not say so to Catherine?”

“Hush! you must not call him by those names, master,” I said “She’d be sadly grieved to hear you She was nearly heartbroken when he ran off, I guess his return will make a jubilee to her ”

Mr Linton walked to a window on the other side of the room that overlooked the court He unfastened it, and leant out I suppose they were below, for he exclaimed, quickly —

“Don’t stand there, love! Bring the person in, if it be any one particular ”

Ere long, I heard the click of the latch, and Catherine flew up-stairs, breathless and wild, too excited to show gladness, indeed, by her face, you would rather have surmised an awful calamity

“Oh, Edgar, Edgar!” she panted, flinging her arms round his neck “Oh, Edgar, darling! Heathcliff’s come back—he is!” And she tightened her embrace to a squeeze

“Well, well,” cried her husband, crossly, “don’t strangle me for that! He never struck me as such a marvellous treasure There is no need to be frantic!”

“I know you didn’t like him,” she answered, repressing a little the intensity of her delight "Yet for my sake, you must be friends; now Shall I tell him to come up?"

"Here?" he said, "into the parlour?"

"Where else?" she asked

He looked vexed, and suggested the kitchen as a more suitable place for him

Mrs Linton eyed him with a droll expression—half angry, half laughing at his fastidiousness

"No," she added after a while, "I cannot sit in the kitchen Set two tables here, Ellen, one for your master and Miss Isabella, being gently, the other for Heathcliff and myself, being of the lower orders Will that please you, dear? Or must I have a fire lighted elsewhere? If so, give directions I'll run down and secure my guest I'm afraid the joy is too great to be real!"

She was about to dart off again, but Edgar arrested her

"You bid him step up," he said, addressing me, "and, Catherine, try to be glad, without being absurd! The whole household need not witness the sight of your welcoming a runaway servant as a brother"

I descended and found Heathcliff waiting under the porch, evidently anticipating an invitation to enter He followed my guidance without waste of words, and I ushered him into the presence of the master and mistress, whose flushed cheeks betrayed signs of warm talking But the lady's glowed with another feeling when her friend appeared at the door, she sprang forward, took both his hands, and led him to Linton, and then she seized Linton's reluctant fingers and crushed them into his

Now fully revealed by the fire and candle-light, I was amazed, more than ever, to behold the transformation of Heathcliff He had grown a tall, athletic, well-formed man, beside whom, my master seemed quite slender and youth-like His upright carriage suggested the idea of his having been in the army His countenance was much older in expression, and decision of feature than Mr Linton's, it looked intelligent, and retained no marks of former degradation A half-civilized ferocity lurked yet in the depressed brows, and eyes full of black fire, but it was subdued, and his manner was even dignified, quite divested of roughness though too stern for grace

My master's surprise equalled or exceeded mine he remained for a minute at a loss how to address the ploughboy, as he had called him Heathcliff dropped his slight hand, and stood looking at him coolly till he chose to speak

"Sit down, sir," he said, at length "Mrs Linton, recalling old times, would have me give you a cordial reception, and, of course, I am gratified when anything occurs to please her"

"And I also," answered Heathcliff, "especially if it be anything in which I have a part I shall stay an hour or two willingly"

He took a seat opposite Catherine, who kept her gaze fixed on him as if she feared he would vanish were she to remove it He did not raise his to her, often, a quick glance now and then sufficed, but it flashed back, each time, more confidently, the undisguised delight he drank from hers

They were too much absorbed in their mutual joy to suffer embarrassment, not so Mr Edgar, he grew pale with pure annoyance, a feeling that reached its climax when his lady rose—and stepping across the rug, seized Heathcliff's hands again, and laughed like one beside herself

"I shall think it a dream to-morrow!" she cried "I shall not be able to believe that I have seen, and touched, and spoken to you once more—and yet, cruel Heathcliff! you don't deserve this welcome To be absent and silent for three years, and never to think of me!"

"A little more than you have thought of me!" he murmured "I heard of your marriage, Cathy, not long since, and, while waiting in the yard below, I meditated this plan—just to have one glimpse of your face—a stare of surprise, perhaps, and pretended pleasure, afterwards settle my score with Hindley, and then prevent the law by doing execution on myself Your welcome has put these ideas out of my mind, but beware of meeting me with another aspect next time! Nay, you'll not drive me off again—you were really sorry for me, were you? Well, there was cause I've fought through a bitter life since I last heard your voice, and you must forgive me, for I struggled only for you!"

"Catherine, unless we are to have cold tea, please to come to the table," interrupted Linton, striving to preserve his ordinary tone, and a due measure of politeness "Mr Heathcliff will have a long walk, wherever he may lodge to-night, and I'm thirsty"

She took her post before the urn, and Miss Isabella came, summoned by the bell, then, having handed their chairs forward, I left the room

The meal hardly endured ten minutes—Catherine's cup was never filled, she could neither eat, nor drink Edgar had made a slop in his saucer, and scarcely swallowed a mouthful

Their guest did not protract his stay, that evening, above an hour longer I asked, as he departed, if he went to Gimmerton?

"No, to Wuthering Heights," he answered "Mr Earnshaw invited me, when I called this morning "

Mr Earnshaw invited him! and he called on Mr Earnshaw! I pondered this sentence painfully, after he was gone Is he turning out a bit of a hypocrite, and coming into the country to work mischief under a cloak? I mused—I had a presentiment, in the bottom of my heart, that he had better have remained away

About the middle of the night, I was wakened from my first nap by Mrs Linton gliding into my chamber, taking a seat on my bedside, and pulling me by the hair to rouse me

"I cannot rest, Ellen," she said, by way of apology "And I want some living creature to keep me company in my happiness! Edgar is sulky, because I am glad of a thing that does not interest him—He refuses to open his mouth, except to utter pettish, silly speeches, and he affirmed I was cruel and selfish for wishing to talk when he was so sick and sleepy He always contrives to be sick at the least cross! I gave a few sentences of commendation to Heathcliff, and he, either for a headache or a pang of envy, began to cry so I got up and left him "

"What use is it praising Heathcliff to him?" I answered "As lads they had an aversion to each other, and Heathcliff would hate just as much to hear him praised—it's human nature Let Mr Linton alone about him, unless you would like an open quarrel between them "

"But does it not show great weakness?" pursued she "I'm not envious—I never feel hurt at the brightness of Isabella's yellow hair, and the whiteness of her skin, at her dainty elegance, and the fondness all the family exhibit for her Even you, Nelly, if we have a dispute sometimes, you back Isabella, at once, and I yield like a foolish mother—I call her a darling, and flatter her into a good temper It pleases her brother to see us cordial, and that pleases me But, they are very much alike they are spoiled children, and fancy the world was made for their accommodation, and, though I humour both, I think a smart chastisement might improve them, all the same "

"You're mistaken, Mrs Linton," said I, "They humour you—I know what there would be to do if they did not! You can well afford to indulge their passing whims, as long as their business is to anticipate all your desires—You may, however, fall out, at last, over something of equal consequence to both sides, and, then those you term weak are very capable of being as obstinate as you"

"And then we shall fight to the death, shan't we, Nelly?" she returned, laughing, "No! I tell you, I have such faith in Linton's love that I believe I might kill him, and he wouldn't wish to retaliate"

I advised her to value him the more for his affection

"I do," she answered, "but, he needn't resort to whining for trifles It is childish, and, instead of melting into tears, because I said that Heathcliff was now worthy of any one's regard, and it would honour the first gentleman in the country to be his friend, he ought to have said it for me, and been delighted from sympathy—He must get accustomed to him, and he may as well like him—considering how Heathcliff has reason to object to him, I'm sure he behaved excellently!"

"What do you think of his going to Wuthering Heights?" I inquired "He is reformed in every respect, apparently—quite a Christian—offering the right hand of fellowship to his enemies all round!"

"He explained it," she replied "I wondered as much as you—He said he called to gather information concerning me, from you, supposing you resided there still, and Joseph told Hindley, who came out, and fell to questioning him of what he had been doing, and how he had been living and finally, desired him to walk in—There were some persons sitting at cards—Heathcliff joined them, my brother lost some money to him, and, finding him plentifully supplied, he requested that he would come again in the evening, to which he consented Hindley is too reckless to select his acquaintance prudently, he doesn't trouble himself to reflect on the causes he might have for mistrusting one whom he has basely injured—But, Heathcliff affirms his principal reason for resuming a connection with his ancient persecutor is a wish to instal himself in quarters at walking distance from the Grange, and an attachment to the house where we lived together, and, likewise a hope that I shall have more opportunities of seeing him there than I could have if he settled in Gimmerton He means to offer liberal payment for permission to lodge at the Heights, and doubtless my brother's covetousness will prompt him to accept the terms, he was always greedy, though what he grasps with one hand, he flings away with the other."

"It's a nice place for a young man to fix his dwelling in!" said I. "Have you no fear of the consequences, Mrs Linton?"

"None for my friend," she replied, "his strong head will keep him from danger—a little for Hindley, but, he can't be made morally worse than he is, and I stand between him and bodily harm—The event of this evening has reconciled me to God, and humanity! I had risen in angry rebellion against providence—Oh, I've endured very, very bitter misery Nelly! If that creature knew how bitter, he'd be ashamed to cloud its removal with idle petulance—It was kindness for him which induced me to bear it alone. Had I expressed the agony I frequently felt, he would have been taught to long for its alleviation as ardently as I—However, it's over, and I'll take no revenge on his folly—I can afford to suffer anything, hereafter! should the meanest thing alive slap me on the cheek, I'd not only turn the other, but, I'd ask pardon for provoking it—and, as a proof, I'll go make my peace with Edgar instantly—Good-night—I'm an angel!"

In this self-complacent conviction she departed, and the success of her fulfilled resolution was obvious on the morrow—Mr Linton had not only abjured his peevishness (though his spirits seemed still subdued by Catherine's exuberance of vivacity) but he ventured no objection to her taking Isabella with her to Wuthering Heights, in the afternoon, and she rewarded him with such a summer of sweetness and affection, in return, as made the house a paradise for several days, both master and servants profiting from the perpetual sunshine.

Heathcliff—Mr Heathcliff I should say in future—used the liberty of visiting Thrushcross Grange cautiously, at first he seemed estimating how far its owner would bear his intrusion. Catherine also, deemed it judicious to moderate her expressions of pleasure in receiving him, and he gradually established his right to be expected.

He retained a great deal of the reserve for which his boyhood was remarkable, and that served to repress all startling demonstrations of feeling. My master's uneasiness experienced a lull, and further circumstances diverted it into another channel for a space.

His new source of trouble sprang from the not anticipated misfortune of Isabella Linton evincing a sudden and irresistible attraction towards the tolerated guest—She was at that time a charming young lady of eighteen, infantile in manners, though possessed of keen wit, keen feelings, and a keen temper, too, if irritated Her brother, who loved her tenderly, was appalled at this fantastic preference Leaving aside the degradation of an alliance with a nameless man, and the possible fact that his property, in default of heirs male, might pass into such a one's power, he had sense to comprehend Heathcliff's disposition—to know that, though his exterior was altered, his mind was unchangeable, and unchanged And he dreaded that mind, it revolted him, he shrank forebodingly from the idea of committing Isabella to its keeping

He would have recoiled still more had he been aware that her attachment rose unsolicited, and was bestowed where it awakened no reciprocation of sentiment, for the minute he discovered its existence, he laid the blame on Heathcliff's deliberate designing

We had all remarked, during some time, that Miss Linton fretted and pined over something She grew cross and wearisome, snapping at and teasing Catherine, continually, at the imminent risk of exhausting her limited patience We excused her to a certain extent, on the plea of ill health—she was dwindling and fading before our eyes—But, one day when she had been peculiarly wayward, rejecting her breakfast, complaining that the servants did not do what she told them, that the mistress would allow her to be nothing in the house, and Edgar neglected her, that she had caught a cold with the doors being left open, and we let the parlour fire go out on purpose to vex her, with a hundred yet more frivolous accusations, Miss Linton peremptorily insisted that she should get to-bed, and, having scolded her heartily, threatened to send for the doctor

Mention of Kenneth, caused her to exclaim, instantly, that her health was perfect, and it was only Catherine's harshness which made her unhappy

"How can you say I am harsh, you naughty fondling?" cried the mistress, amazed at the unreasonable assertion "You are surely losing your reason When have I been harsh, tell me?"

"Yesterday!" sobbed Isabella, "and now!"

"Yesterday!" said her sister-in-law "On what occasion?"

"In our walk along the moor, you told me to ramble where I pleased, while you sauntered on with Mr Heathcliff!"

"And that's your notion of harshness?" said Catherine, laughing. "It was no hint that your company was superfluous, we didn't care whether you kept with us or not, I merely thought Heathcliff's talk would have nothing entertaining for your ears."

"Oh, no," wept the young lady, "you wished me away, because you knew I liked to be there!"

"Is she sane?" asked Mrs Linton, appealing to me. "I'll repeat our conversation, word for word, Isabella, and you point out any charm it could have had for you."

"I don't mind the conversation," she answered. "I wanted to be with—"

"Well!" said Catherine, perceiving her hesitate to complete the sentence.

"With him, and I won't always be sent off!" she continued, kindling up. "You are a dog in the manger, Cathy, and desire no one to be loved but yourself!"

"You are an impertinent little monkey!" exclaimed Mrs Linton, in surprise. "But I'll not believe this idiocy! It is impossible that you can covet the admiration of Heathcliff—that you consider him an agreeable person! I hope I have misunderstood you, Isabella?"

"No, you have not," said the infatuated girl. "I love him more than ever you loved Edgar, and he might love me, if you would let him!"

"I wouldn't be you for a kingdom, then!" Catherine declared emphatically—and she seemed to speak sincerely. "Nelly, help me to convince her of her madness. Tell her what Heathcliff is—an unreclaimed creature, without refinement—without cultivation, an arid wilderness of furze and whinstone. I'd as soon put that little canary into the park on a winter's day as recommend you to bestow your heart on him! It is deplorable ignorance of his character, child, and nothing else, which makes that dream enter your head. Pray don't imagine that he conceals depths of benevolence and affection beneath a stern exterior! He's not a rough diamond—a pearl-containing oyster of a rustic, he's a fierce, pitiless, wolfish man. I never say to him let this or that enemy alone, because it would be ungenerous or cruel to harm them—I say let them alone, because I should hate them to be wronged and he'd crush you, like a sparrow's egg, Isabella, if he found you a troublesome charge. I know he couldn't love a Linton, and yet, he'd be quite capable of marrying your fortune, and expectations. Avarice is growing with him a besetting sin

There's my picture, and I'm his friend—so much so, that had he thought seriously to catch you, I should, perhaps, have held my tongue, and let you fall into his trap”

Miss Linton regarded her sister-in-law with indignation

“For shame! for shame!” she repeated, angrily, “You are wiser than twenty foes, you poisonous friend!”

“Ah! you won't believe me, then?” said Catherine “You think I speak from wicked selfishness?”

“I'm certain you do,” retorted Isabella, “and I shudder at you!”

“Good!” cried the other “Try for yourself, if that be your spirit, I have done, and yield the argument to your saucy insolence”

“And I must suffer for her egotism!” she sobbed, as Mrs Linton left the room “All, all is against me, she has blighted my single consolation But she uttered falsehoods, didn't she? Mr Heathcliff is not a fiend, he has an honourable soul, and a true one, or how could he remember her?”

“Banish him from your thoughts, miss,” I said “He's a bird of bad omen, no mate for you Mrs Linton spoke strongly, and yet, I can't contradict her She is better acquainted with his heart than I, or any one besides, and she never would represent him as worse than he is Honest people don't hide their deeds How has he been living? how has he got rich? why is he staying at Wuthering Heights, the house of a man whom he abhors? They say Mr Earnshaw is worse and worse since he came They sit up all night together continually and Hindley has been borrowing money on his land, and does nothing but play and drink, I heard only a week ago, it was Joseph who told me—I met him at Gimmerton

“Nelly!” he said, ‘we’s hae a Crahn’s ’quest enah, at ahr folks One on ’ems a’most gotten his finger cut off wi’ haudin t’ other froo’ sticking hisselsn loike a cawlf That’s maister, yah knaw, ’ut’s soa up uh going tuh t’grand ’sizes He’s noan feard uh t’ Bench uh judges, norther Paul, nur Peter, nur John, noi Mathew, nor noan on ’em, nut he! He fair like’s he langs tuh set his brazened face agean ’em! And yon bonny lad Heathcliff, yah mund, he’s a rare ’un! He can gurn a laugh, as weel’s onybody at a raight divil’s jest Does he niver say nowt of his fine living amang us, when he goas tuh t’ Grange? This is t’ way on’t—up at sun-dahn, dice, brandy, closed shutters, und can’le lught till next day, at noon—then, t’ fool gangs banning un raving to his cham'er, makking dacent fowks dig thur fingers i' thur lugs fur varry shaume, un' th' knave, wah he carn cahnt his brass, un' ate, un' sleep, un' off tuh his neighbour's tuh gossip wi' t' wife I' course, he tells Dame Catherine hah hor fathur's goold runs intuh his pocket, and ner fathur's son gallops dahn t' Broad road, while he flees afore tuh oppen t' pikes?" Now, Miss Linton, Joseph is an old rascal, but no liar, and, if his account of Heathcliff's conduct be true, you would never think of desiring such a husband, would you?"

"You are leagued with the rest, Ellen!" she replied "I'll not listen to your slanders What malevolence you must have to wish to convince me that there is no happiness in the world!"

Whether she would have got over this fancy if left to herself, or persevered in nursing it perpetually, I cannot say, she had little time to reflect The day after, there was a justice-meeting at the next town, my master was obliged to attend, and Mr Heathcliff, aware of his absence, called rather earlier than usual Catherine and Isabella were sitting in the library, on hostile terms, but silent The latter alarmed at her recent indiscretion, and the disclosure she had made of her secret feelings in a transient fit of passion, the former, on mature consideration, really offended with her companion, and, if she laughed again at her pertness, inclined to make it no laughing matter to her

She did laugh as she saw Heathcliff pass the window I was sweeping the hearth, and I noticed a mischievous smile on her lips Isabella, absorbed in her meditations, or a book, remained till the door opened, and it was too late to attempt an escape, which she would gladly have done had it been practicable

"Come in, that's right!" exclaimed the mistress, gaily, pulling a chair to the fire "Here are two people sadly in need of a third to thaw the ice between them, and you are the very one we should both of us choose Heathcliff, I'm proud to show you, at last, somebody that dotes on you more than myself I expect you to feel flattered—nay, it's not Nelly, don't look at her! My poor little sister-in-law is breaking her heart by mere contemplation of your physical and moral beauty It lies in your own power to be Edgar's brother! No, no, Isabella, you shan't run off," she continued, arresting, with feigned playfulness, the confounded girl who had risen indignantly "We were quarrelling like cats about you, Heathcliff, and I was fairly beaten in protestations of devotion and admiration, and, moreover, I was informed that if I would but have the manners to stand aside, my rival, as she will have herself to be, would shoot a shaft into your soul that would fix you for ever, and send my image into eternal oblivion!"

"Catherine!" said Isabella, calling up her dignity, and disdaining to struggle from the tight grasp that held her "I'd thank you to adhere to the truth and not slander me, even in joke! Mr Heathcliff, be kind enough to bid this friend of yours release me—she forgets that you and I are not intimate acquaintances, and what amuses her is painful to me beyond expression"

As the guest answered nothing, but took his seat, and looked thoroughly indifferent what sentiments she cherished concerning him, she turned, and whispered an earnest appeal for liberty to her tormentor

"By no means!" cried Mrs Linton in answer "I won't be named a dog in the manger again You shall stay, now then! Heathcliff, why don't you evince satisfaction at my pleasant news? Isabella swears that the love Edgar has for me is nothing to that she entertains for you I'm sure she made some speech of the kind, did she not, Ellen? And she has fasted ever since the day before yesterday's walk, from sorrow and rage that I despatched her out of your society, under the idea of its being unacceptable"

"I think you belie her," said Heathcliff, twisting his chair to face them "She wishes to be out of my society now, at any rate!"

And he stared hard at the object of discourse, as one might do at a strange repulsive animal, a centipede from the Indies, for instance, which curiosity leads one to examine in spite of the aversion it raises

The poor thing couldn't bear that, she grew white and red in rapid succession, and, while tears beaded her lashes, bent the strength of her small fingers to loosen the firm clutch of Catherine, and perceiving that, as fast as she raised one finger off her arm, another closed down, and she could not remove the whole together, she began to make use of her nails, and their sharpness presently ornamented the detainer's with crescents of red

"There's a tigress!" exclaimed Mrs Linton, setting her free, and shaking her hand with pain "Begone, for God's sake, and hide your vixen face! How foolish to reveal those talons to him! Can't you fancy the conclusions he'll draw? Look, Heathcliff! they are instruments that will do execution—you must beware of your eyes"

"I'd wrench them off her fingers, if they ever menaced me," he answered, brutally, when the door had closed after her "But, what did you mean by teasing the creature in that manner, Cathy? You were not speaking the truth, were you?"

"I assure you I was," she returned "She has been pining for your sake several weeks, and raving about you this morning, and pouring forth a deluge of abuse, because I represented your failings in a plain light for the purpose of mitigating her adoration But don't notice it further I wished to punish her sauciness, that's all—I like her too well, my dear Heathcliff, to let you absolutely seize and devour her up "

"And I like her too ill to attempt it," said he, "except in a very ghoulish fashion You'd hear of odd things, if I lived alone with that mawkish, waxen face, the most ordinary would be painting on its white the colours of the rainbow, and turning the blue eyes, black, every day or two, they detestably resemble Linton's "

"Delectably," observed Catherine "They are dove's eyes—angel's!"

"She's her brother's heir, is she not?" he asked, after a brief silence

"I should be sorry to think so," returned his companion "Half-a-dozen nephews shall erase her title, please Heaven! Abstract your mind from the subject, at present—you are too prone to covet your neighbour's goods remember this neighbour's goods are mine "

"If they were mine, they would be none the less that," said Heathcliff, "but though Isabella Linton may be silly, she is scarcely mad, and—in short, we'll dismiss the matter as you advise "

From their tongues, they did dismiss it, and Catherine, probably, from her thoughts The other, I felt certain, recalled it often in the course of the evening, I saw him smile to himself—grin rather—and lapse into ominous musing whenever Mrs Linton had occasion to be absent from the apartment

I determined to watch his movements My heart invariably cleaved to the master's, in preference to Catherine's side, with reason, I imagined, for he was kind, and trustful, and honourable and she—she could not be called the opposite, yet, she seemed to allow herself such wide latitude, that I had little faith in her principles, and still less sympathy for her feelings I wanted something to happen which might have the effect of freeing both Wuthering Heights and the Grange of Mr Heathcliff, quietly, leaving us as we had been prior to his advent His visits were a continual nightmare to me, and, I suspected, to my master also His abode at the Heights was an oppression past explaining I felt that God had forsaken the stray sheep there to its own wicked wanderings, and an evil beast prowled between it and the fold, waiting his time to spring and destroy

---

CHAPTER XI

---

SOMETIMES, while meditating on these things in solitude, I've got up in a sudden terror, and put on my bonnet to go see how all was at the farm, I've persuaded my conscience that it was a duty to warn him how people talked regarding his ways, and then I've recollected his confirmed bad habits, and, hopeless of benefiting him, have flinched from re-entering the dismal house, doubting if I could bear to be taken at my word

One time, I passed the old gate, going out of my way, on a journey to Gimmerton It was about the period that my narrative has reached—a bright, frosty afternoon, the ground bare, and the road hard and dry

I came to a stone where the highway branches off on to the moor at your left hand, a rough sand-pillar, with the letters W H cut on its north side, on the east, G, and on the south-west, T G It serves as a guide-post to the Grange, Heights, and village The sun shone yellow on its grey head, reminding me of summer, and I cannot say why, but all at once, a gush of child's sensations flowed into my heart Hindley and I held it a favourite spot twenty years before

I gazed long at the weather-worn block, and, stooping down, perceived a hole near the bottom still full of snail-shells and pebbles which we were fond of storing there with more perishable things—and, as fresh as reality, it appeared that I beheld my early playmate seated on the withered turf, his dark, square head bent forward, and his little hand scooping out the earth with a piece of slate

"Poor Hindley!" I exclaimed, involuntarily

I started—my bodily eye was cheated into a momentary belief that the child lifted its face and stared straight into mine! It vanished in a twinkling, but, immediately, I felt an irresistible yearning to be at the Heights. Superstition urged me to comply with this impulse—"supposing he should be dead!" I thought—"or should die soon!"—supposing it were a sign of death!"

The nearer I got to the house the more agitated I grew and on catching sight of it, I trembled every limb. The apparition had outstripped me, it stood looking through the gate. That was my first idea on observing an elf-locked, brown-eyed boy setting his ruddy countenance against the bars. Further reflection suggested this must be Hareton, my Hareton, not altered greatly since I left him, ten months since.

"God bless thee, darling!" I cried, forgetting instantaneously my foolish fears. "Hareton, it's Nelly—Nelly, thy nurse."

He retreated out of arm's length, and picked up a large flint.

"I am come to see thy father, Hareton," I added, guessing from the action that Nelly, if she lived in his memory at all, was not recognized as one with me.

He raised his missile to hurl it, I commenced a soothing speech, but could not stay his hand. The stone struck my bonnet, and then ensued, from the stammering lips of the little fellow, a string of curses which, whether he comprehended them or not, were delivered with practised emphasis, and distorted his baby features into a shocking expression of malignity.

You may be certain this grieved, more than angered me. Fit to cry, I took an orange from my pocket, and offered it to propitiate him.

He hesitated, and then snatched it from my hold, as if he fancied I only intended to tempt, and disappoint him.

I showed another keeping it out of his reach.

"Who has taught you those fine words, my bairn?" I inquired. "The curate?"

"Damn the curate, and thee! Gie me that," he replied.

"Tell us where you got your lessons, and you shall have it," said I. "Who's your master?"

"Devil daddy," was his answer.

"And what do you learn from Daddy?" I continued.

He jumped at the fruit, I raised it higher. "What does he teach you?" I asked.

"Naught," said he, "but to keep out of his gait—Daddy cannot bide me, because I swear at him"

"Ah! and the devil teaches you to swear at Daddy?" I observed

"Aye—nay," he drawled

"Who then?"

"Heathcliff"

I asked if he liked Mr Heathcliff

"Aye!" he answered again

Desiring to have his reasons for liking him, I could only gather the sentences "I know'n't—he pays Dad back what he gives to me—he curses Daddy for cursing me—He says I mun do as I will"

"And the curate does not teach you to read and write, then?" I pursued

"No, I was told the curate should have his — teeth dashed down his — throat, if he stepped over the threshold—Heathcliff, had promised that!"

I put the orange in his hand, and bade him tell his father that a woman called Nelly Dean, was waiting to speak with him, by the garden gate

He went up the walk, and entered the house, but instead of Hindley, Heathcliff appeared on the door stones, and I turned directly and ran down the road as hard as ever I could race, making no halt till I gained the guide post, and feeling as scared as if I had raised a goblin

This is not much connected with Miss Isabella's affair, except that it urged me to resolve further, on mounting vigilant guard, and doing my utmost to check the spread of such bad influence at the Grange, even though I should wake a domestic storm, by thwarting Mrs Linton's pleasure

The next time Heathcliff came, my young lady chanced to be feeding some pigeons in the court She had never spoken a word to her sister-in-law, for three days, but, she had likewise dropped her fretful complaining, and we found it a great comfort

Heathcliff had not the habit of bestowing a single unnecessary civility on Miss Linton, I knew Now, as soon as he beheld her, his first precaution was to take a sweeping survey of the house-front I was standing by the kitchen window, but I drew out of sight He then stepped across the pavement to her, and said something she seemed embarrassed, and desirous of getting away, to prevent it, he laid his hand on her arm she averted her face, he apparently put some question which she had no mind to answer There was another rapid glance at the house, and supposing himself unseen, the scoundrel had the impudence to embrace her

"Judas! Traitor!" I ejaculated, "you are a hypocrite, too, are you? a deliberate deceiver"

"Who is, Nelly?" said Catherine's voice at my elbow—I had been over-intent on watching the pair outside to mark her entrance

"Your worthless friend!" I answered, warmly, "the sneaking rascal yonder—Ah, he has caught a glimpse of us—he is coming in! I wonder will he have the art to find a plausible excuse, for making love to Miss, when he told you he hated her?"

Mrs Linton saw Isabella tear herself free, and run into the garden, and a minute after, Heathcliff opened the door

I couldn't withhold giving some loose to my indignation, but Catherine angrily insisted on silence, and threatened to order me out of the kitchen, if I dared be so presumptuous as to put in my insolent tongue

"To hear you, people might think you were the mistress!" she cried "You want setting down in your right place! Heathcliff, what are you about, raising this stir? I said you must let Isabella alone!—I beg you will, unless you are tired of being received here, and wish Linton to draw the bolts against you!"

"God forbid that he should try!" answered the black villain—I detested him just then "God keep him meek and patient! Every day I grow madder after sending him to heaven!"

"Hush!" said Catherine, shutting the inner door "Don't vex me Why have you disregarded my request? Did she come across you on purpose?"

"What is it to you?" he growled, "I have a right to kiss her, if she chooses, and you have no right to object—I'm not your husband, you needn't be jealous of me!"

"I'm not jealous of you," replied the mistress, "I'm jealous for you Clear your face, you shan't scowl at me! If you like Isabella, you shall marry her But, do you like her, tell the truth, Heathcliff? There, you won't answer I'm certain you don't!"

"And would Mr Linton approve of his sister marrying that man?" I inquired

"Mr Linton should approve," returned my lady decisively

"He might spare himself the trouble," said Heathcliff, "I could do as well without his approbation—And, as to you, Catherine, I have a mind to speak a few words, now, while we are at it—I want you to be aware that I know you have treated me infernally—infernally! Do you hear? And, if you flatter yourself that I don't perceive it you are a fool—and if you think I can be consoled by sweet words you are an idiot—and if you fancy I'll suffer unrevenged, I'll convince you of the contrary, in a very little while! Meantime, thank you for telling me your sister-in-law's secret—I swear I'll make the most of it, and stand you aside!"

"What new phase of his character is this?" exclaimed Mrs Linton, in amazement "I've treated you infernally—and you'll take your revenge! How will you take it, ungrateful brute? How have I treated you infernally?"

"I seek no revenge on you," replied Heathcliff, less vehemently "That's not the plan—The tyrant grinds down his slaves and they don't turn against him, they crush those beneath them—You are welcome to torture me to death for your amusement, only, allow me to amuse myself a little in the same style—And refrain from insult, as much as you are able Having levelled my palace, don't erect a hovel and complacently admire your own charity in giving me that for a home If I imagined you really wished me to marry Isabella, I'd cut my throat!"

"Oh, the evil is that I am not jealous, is it?" cried Catherine "Well, I won't repeat my offer of a wife—It is as bad as offering Satan a lost soul—Your bliss lies, like his, in inflicting misery—You prove it—Edgar is restored from the ill-temper he gave way to at your coming, I begin to be secure and tranquil, and, you, restless to know us at peace, appear resolved on exciting a quarrel—quarrel with Edgar if you please, Heathcliff, and deceive his sister, you'll hit on exactly the most efficient method of revenging yourself on me"

The conversation ceased—Mrs Linton sat down by the fire, flushed and gloomy The spirit which served her was growing intractable she could neither lay nor control it He stood on the hearth, with folded arms brooding on his evil thoughts, and in this position I left them, to seek the master who was wondering what kept Catherine below so long

"Ellen," said he, when I entered, "have you seen your mistress?"

"Yes, she is in the kitchen, sir," I answered "She's sadly put out by Mr Heathcliff's behaviour and, indeed, I do think it's time to arrange his visits on another footing. There's harm in being too soft and now it's come to this—" And I related the scene in the court, and, as near as I dared, the whole subsequent dispute. I fancied it could not be very prejudicial to Mrs Linton, unless she made it so, afterwards, by assuming the defensive for her guest.

Edgar Linton had difficulty in hearing me to the close—His first words revealed that he did not clear his wife of blame.

"This is insufferable!" he exclaimed. "It is disgraceful that she should own him for a friend, and force his company on me! Call me two men out of the hall, Ellen—Catherine shall linger no longer to argue with the low ruffian—I have humoured her enough."

He descended, and bidding the servants wait in the passage, went, followed by me, to the kitchen. Its occupants had recommenced their angry discussion, Mrs Linton, at least, was scolding with renewed vigour, Heathcliff had moved to the window, and hung his head somewhat cowed by her violent rating apparently.

He saw the master first, and made a hasty motion that she should be silent, which she obeyed, abruptly, on discovering the reason of his intimation.

"How is this?" said Linton, addressing her, "what notion of propriety must you have to remain here, after the language which has been held to you by that blackguard? I suppose, because it is his ordinary talk, you think nothing of it—you are habituated to his baseness, and, perhaps, imagine I can get used to it too!"

"Have you been listening at the door, Edgar?" asked the mistress, in a tone particularly calculated to provoke her husband, implying both carelessness and contempt of his irritation.

Heathcliff, who had raised his eyes at the former speech, gave a sneering laugh at the latter, on purpose, it seemed, to draw Mr Linton's attention to him.

He succeeded, but Edgar did not mean to entertain him with any high flights of passion.

"I have been so far forbearing with you, sir," he said, quietly, "not that I was ignorant of your miserable, degraded character, but, I felt you were only partly responsible for that, and Catherine wishing to keep up your acquaintance, I acquiesced—foolishly. Your presence is a moral poison that would contaminate the most virtuous—for that cause, and to prevent worse consequences, I shall deny you, hereafter, admission into this house, and give notice, now, that I require your instant departure. Three minutes' delay will render it involuntary and ignominious."

Heathcliff measured the height and breadth of the speaker with an eye full of derision.

"Cathy, this lamb of yours threatens like a bull!" he said. "It is in danger of splitting its skull against my knuckles. By God, Mr Linton, I'm mortally sorry that you are not worth knocking down!"

My master glanced towards the passage, and signed me to fetch the men—he had no intention of hazarding a personal encounter. I obeyed the hint, but Mrs Linton suspecting something, followed, and when I attempted to call them, she pulled me back, slammed the door to, and locked it.

"Fair means!" she said, in answer to her husband's look of angry surprise. "If you have not courage to attack him, make an apology, or allow yourself to be beaten. It will correct you of feigning more valour than you possess. No, I'll swallow the key before you shall get it! I'm delightfully rewarded for my kindness to each! After constant indulgence of one's weak nature, and the other's bad one, I earn, for thanks, two samples of blind ingratitude, stupid to absurdity! Edgar, I was defending you, and yours, and I wish Heathcliff may flog you sick, for daring to think an evil thought of me!"

It did not need the medium of a flogging to produce that effect on the master. He tried to wrest the key from Catherine's grasp, and for safety she flung it into the hottest part of the fire, whereupon Mr Edgar was taken with a nervous trembling, and his countenance grew deadly pale. For his life he could not avert that access of emotion—mingled anguish and humiliation overcame him completely. He leant on the back of a chair, and covered his face.

"Oh! heavens! In old days this would win you knighthood!" exclaimed Mrs Linton. "We are vanquished! we are vanquished! Heathcliff would as soon lift a finger at you as a king would march his army against a colony of mice. Cheer up, you shan't be hurt! Your type is not a lamb, it's a sucking leveret."

"I wish you joy of the milk-blooded coward, Cathy!" said her friend. "I compliment you on your taste and that is the slandering, shivering thing you preferred to me! I would not strike him with my fist, but I'd kick him with my foot, and experience considerable satisfaction Is he weeping, or is he going to faint for fear?"

The fellow approached and gave the chair on which Linton rested a push He'd better have kept his distance my master quickly sprang erect, and struck him full on the throat a blow that would have levelled a slighter man

It took his breath for a moment, and, while he choked, Mr Linton walked out by the back door into the yard, and from thence, to the front entrance

"There! you've done with coming here," cried Catherine "Get away, now—he'll return with a brace of pistols, and half-a-dozen assistants If he did overhear us, of course, he'd never forgive you You've played me an ill turn, Heathcliff! But, go—make haste! I'd rather see Edgar at bay than you "

"Do you suppose I'm going with that blow burning in my gullet?" he thundered "By Hell, no! I'll crush his ribs in like a rotten hazel-nut, before I cross the threshold! If I don't floor him now, I shall murder him some time, so, as you value his existence, let me get at him!"

"He's not coming," I interposed, framing a bit of a lie "There's the coachman, and the two gardeners, you'll surely not wait to be thrust into the road by them! Each has a bludgeon, and master will, very likely, be watching from the parlour windows to see that they fulfill his orders "

The gardeners and coachman were there, but Linton was with them They had already entered the court—Heathcliff, on second thoughts, resolved to avoid a struggle against the three underlings, he seized the poker, smashed the lock from the inner door, and made his escape as they tramped in

Mrs Linton, who was very much excited, bid me accompany her upstairs She did not know my share in contributing to the disturbance, and I was anxious to keep her in ignorance

"I'm nearly distracted, Nelly!" she exclaimed, throwing herself on the sofa "A thousand smiths' hammers are beating in my head! Tell Isabella to shun me—this uproar is owing to her, and should she or any one else aggravate my anger at present, I shall get wild And, Nelly, say to Edgar, if you see him again to-night, that I'm in danger of being seriously ill—I wish it may prove true He has startled and distressed me shockingly! I want to frighten him Besides, he might come and begin a string of abuse, or complainings, I'm certain I should recriminate, and God knows where we should end! Will you do so, my good Nelly? You are aware that I am no way blameable in this matter. What possessed him to turn listener? Heathcliff's talk was outrageous, after you left us, but I could soon have diverted him from Isabella, and the rest meant nothing. Now, all is dashed wrong by the fool's-crazing to hear evil of self that haunts some people like a demon! Had Edgar never gathered our conversation, he would never have been the worse for it. Really, when he opened on me in that unreasonable tone of displeasure, after I had scolded Heathcliff till I was hoarse for him, I did not care, hardly, what they did to each other, especially as I felt that, however the scene closed, we should all be driven asunder for nobody knows how long! Well, if I cannot keep Heathcliff for my friend—if Edgar will be mean and jealous, I'll try to break their hearts by breaking my own. That will be a prompt way of finishing all, when I am pushed to extremity! But it's a deed to be reserved for a forlorn hope—I'd not take Linton by surprise with it. To this point he has been discreet in dreading to provoke me, you must represent the peril of quitting that policy, and remind him of my passionate temper, verging, when kindled, on frenzy—I wish you could dismiss that apathy out of your countenance, and look rather more anxious about me!"

The stolidity with which I received these instructions was, no doubt, rather exasperating, for they were delivered in perfect sincerity, but I believed a person who could plan the turning of her fits of passion to account, beforehand, might, by exerting her will, manage to control herself tolerably even while under their influence, and I did not wish to "frighten" her husband, as she said, and multiply his annoyances for the purpose of serving her selfishness. Therefore I said nothing when I met the master coming towards the parlour, but I took the liberty of turning back to listen whether they would resume their quarrel together.

He began to speak first.

"Remain where you are, Catherine," he said, without any anger in his voice, but with much sorrowful despondency. "I shall not stay. I am neither come to wrangle, nor be reconciled. But I wish just to learn whether, after this evening's events, you intend to continue your intimacy with——"

"Oh, for mercy's sake," interrupted the mistress, stamping her foot, "for mercy's sake, let us hear no more of it now! Your cold blood cannot be worked into a fever—your veins are full of ice-water—but mine are boiling, and the sight of such chillness makes them dance”

“To get rid of me—answer my question,” persevered Mr Linton “You must answer it, and that violence does not alarm me I have found that you can be as stoical as any one, when you please Will you give up Heathcliff hereafter, or will you give up me? It is impossible for you to be my friend, and his at the same time, and I absolutely require to know which you choose”

“I require to be let alone!” exclaimed Catherine, furiously “I demand it! Don’t you see I can scarcely stand? Edgar, you—you leave me!”

She rang the bell till it broke with a twang I entered leisurely It was enough to try the temper of a saint, such senseless, wicked rages! There she lay dashing her head against the arm of the sofa, and grinding her teeth, so that you might fancy she would crash them to splinters!

Mr Linton stood looking at her in sudden compunction and fear He told me to fetch some water She had no breath for speaking

I brought a glass full, and as she would not drink, I sprinkled it on her face In a few seconds she stretched herself out stiff, and turned up her eyes, while her cheeks, at once blanched and livid, assumed the aspect of death

Linton looked terrified

“There is nothing in the world the matter,” I whispered I did not want him to yield, though I could not help being afraid in my heart

“She has blood on her lips!” he said, shuddering

“Never mind!” I answered, tartly And I told him how she had resolved, previous to his coming, on exhibiting a fit of frenzy

I incautiously gave the account aloud, and she heard me, for she started up—her hair flying over her shoulders, her eyes flashing, the muscles of her neck and arms standing out preternaturally I made up my mind for broken bones, at least, but she only glared about for an instant, and then rushed from the room The master directed me to follow, I did, to her chamber door, she hindered me from going farther by securing it against me

As she never offered to descend to breakfast next morning, I went to ask whether she would have some carried up

“No!” she replied, peremptorily

The same question was repeated at dinner, and tea, and again on the morrow after, and received the same answer

Mr Linton, on his part, spent his time in the library, and did not inquire concerning his wife's occupations. Isabella and he had had an hour's interview, during which he tried to elicit from her some sentiment of proper horror for Heathcliff's advances, but he could make nothing of her evasive replies, and was obliged to close the examination, unsatisfactorily, adding, however, a solemn warning, that if she were so insane as to encourage that worthless suitor, it would dissolve all bonds of relationship between herself and him

---

CHAPTER XII

---

~~~~~

WHILE Miss Linton moped about the park and garden, always silent, and almost always in tears, and her brother shut himself up among books that he never opened, wearying, I guessed, with a continual vague expectation that Catherine, repenting her conduct, would come of her own accord to ask pardon, and seek a reconciliation, and she fasted pertinaciously, under the idea, probably, that at every meal, Edgar was ready to choke for her absence, and pride alone held him from running to cast himself at her feet, I went about my household duties, convinced that the Grange had but one sensible soul in its walls, and that lodged in my body

I wasted no condolences on miss, nor any expostulations on my mistress, nor did I pay attention to the sighs of my master, who yearned to hear his lady's name, since he might not hear her voice

I determined they should come about as they pleased for me, and although it was a tiresomely slow process, I began to rejoice at length in a faint dawn of its progress, as I thought at first

Mrs Linton, on the third day, unbarred her door, and having finished the water in her pitcher and decanter, desired a renewed supply, and a basin of gruel, for she believed she was dying. That I set down as a speech meant for Edgar's ears, I believed no such thing, so I kept it to myself, and brought her some tea and dry toast.

Wuthering Heights

She eat and drank eagerly, and sank back on her pillow again, clenching her hands and groaning

"Oh, I will die," she exclaimed, "since no one cares anything about me I wish I had not taken that "

Then a good while after I heard her murmur,

"No, I'll not die—he'd be glad—he does not love me at all—he would never miss me!"

"Did you want anything, ma'am?" I enquired, still preserving my external composure, in spite of her ghastly countenance, and strange exaggerated manner

"What is that apathetic being doing?" she demanded, pushing her thick entangled locks from her wasted face "Has he fallen into a lethargy, or is he dead?"

"Neither," replied I, "if you mean Mr Linton He's tolerably well, I think, though his studies occupy him rather more than they ought, he is continually among his books, since he has no other society "

I should not have spoken so, if I had known her true condition, but I could not get rid of the notion that she acted a part of her disorder

"Among his books!" she cried, confounded "And I dying! I on the brink of the grave! My God! does he know how I'm altered?" continued she, staring at her reflection in a mirror, hanging against the opposite wall "Is that Catherine Linton? He imagines me in a pet—in play, perhaps Cannot you inform him that it is frightful earnest? Nelly, if it be not too late, as soon as I learn how he feels, I'll choose between these two—either to starve, at once, that would be no punishment unless he had a heart—or to recover and leave the country Are you speaking the truth about him now? Take care Is he actually so utterly indifferent for my life?"

"Why, ma'am," I answered, "the master has no idea of your being deranged, and, of course, he does not fear that you will let yourself die of hunger "

"You think not? Cannot you tell him I will?" she returned, "persuade him—speak of your own mind—say you are certain I will!"

"No, you forget, Mrs Linton," I suggested, "that you have eaten some food with a relish this evening, and to-morrow you will perceive its good effects "

"If I were only sure it would kill him," she interrupted, "I'd kill myself directly! These three awful nights, I've never closed my lids—and oh, I've been tormented! I've been haunted, Nelly! But I begin to fancy you don't like me. How strange! I thought, though everybody hated and despised each other, they could not avoid loving me—and they have all turned to enemies in a few hours. They have, I'm positive, the people here. How dreary to meet death, surrounded by their cold faces. Isabella, terrified and repelled, afraid to enter the room, it would be so dreadful to watch Catherine go. And Edgar standing solemnly by to see it over, then offering prayers of thanks to God for restoring peace to his house, and going back to his books! What in the name of all that feels, has he to do with books, when I am dying?"

She could not bear the notion which I had put into her head of Mr Linton's philosophical resignation. Tossing about, she increased her feverish bewilderment to madness, and tore the pillow with her teeth, then raising herself up all burning, desired that I would open the window. We were in the middle of winter, the wind blew strong from the north-east, and I objected.

Both the expressions flitting over her face, and the changes of her moods, began to alarm me terribly, and brought to my recollection her former illness, and the doctor's injunction that she not be crossed.

A minute previously she was violent, now, supported on one arm, and not noticing my refusal to obey her, she seemed to find childish diversion in pulling the feathers from the rents she had just made, and ranging them on the sheet according to their different species. Her mind had strayed to other associations.

"That's a turkey's," she murmured to herself, "and this is a wild duck's, and this is a pigeon's. Ah, they put pigeons' feathers in the pillows—no wonder I couldn't die! Let me take care to throw it on the floor when I lie down. And here is a moor-cock's, and this—I should know it among a thousand—it's a lapwing's. Bonny bird, wheeling over our heads in the middle of the moor. It wanted to get to its nest, for the clouds touched the swells, and it felt rain coming. This feather was picked up from the heath, the bird was not shot—we saw its nest in the winter, full of little skeletons. Heathcliff set a trap over it, and the old ones dare not come. I made him promise he'd never shoot a lapwing, after that, and he didn't. Yes, here are more! Did he shoot my lapwings, Nelly? Are they red, any of them? Let me look."

"Give over with that baby-work!" I interrupted, dragging the pillow away, and turning the holes towards the mattress, for she was removing its contents by handfuls "Lie down and shut your eyes, you're wandering There's a mess! The down is flying about like snow!"

I went here and there collecting it

"I see in you, Nelly," she continued, dreamily, "an aged woman—you have grey hair, and bent shoulders This bed is the fairy cave under Peniston Crag, and you are gathering elf-bolts to hurt our heifers, pretending, while I am near, that they are only locks of wool That's what you'll come to fifty years hence, I know you are not so now I'm not wandering, you are mistaken, or else I should believe you really were that withered hag, and I should think I was under Peniston Crag, and I'm conscious it's night, and there are two candles on the table making the black press shine like jet"

"The black press? where is that?" I asked "You are talking in your sleep!"

"It's against the wall, as it always is," she replied "It does appear odd—I see a face in it!"

"There's no press in the room, and never was," said I, resuming my seat, and looping up the curtain that I might watch her

"Don't you see that face?" she enquired, gazing earnestly at the mirror

And say what I could, I was incapable of making her comprehend it to be her own, so I rose and covered it with a shawl

"It's behind there still!" she pursued, anxiously "And it stirred Who is it? I hope it will not come out when you are gone! Oh! Nelly, the room is haunted! I'm afraid of being alone!"

I took her hand in mine, and bid her be composed, for a succession of shudders convulsed her frame, and she would keep straining her gaze towards the glass

"There's nobody here!" I insisted "It was yourself, Mrs Linton, you knew it a while since"

"Myself!" she gasped, "and the clock is striking twelve! It's true, then, that's dreadful!"

Her fingers clutched the clothes, and gathered them over her eyes I attempted to steal to the door with an intention of calling her husband, but I was summoned back by a piercing shriek The shawl had dropped from the frame

"Why what is the matter?" cried I "Who is coward now? Wake up! That is the glass—the mirror, Mrs Linton, and you see yourself in it, and there am I too by your side"

Trembling and bewildered, she held me fast, but the horror gradually passed from her countenance, its paleness gave place to a glow of shame

'Oh, dear! I thought I was at home,' she sighed "I thought I was lying in my chamber at Wuthering Heights Because I'm weak, my brain got confused, and I screamed unconsciously Don't say anything, but stay with me I dread sleeping, my dreams appal me"

"A sound sleep would do you good, ma'am," I answered, "and I hope this suffering will prevent your trying starving again"

"Oh, if I were but in my own bed in the old house!" she went on bitterly, wringing her hands, "And that wind sounding in the firs by the lattice Do let me feel it—it comes straight down the moor—do let me have one breath!"

To pacify her, I held the casement ajar, a few seconds A cold blast rushed through, I closed it, and returned to my post

She lay still now her face bathed in tears—Exhaustion of body had entirely subdued her spirit, our fiery Catherine was no better than a wailing child!

"How long is it since I shut myself in here?" she asked suddenly reviving

"It was Monday evening," I replied, "and this is Thursday night, or rather Friday morning, at present"

"What! of the same week?" she exclaimed "Only that brief time?"

"Long enough to live on nothing but cold water, and ill temper," observed I

"Well, it seems a weary number of hours," she muttered doubtfully, "it must be more—I remember being in the parlour, after they had quarrelled, and Edgar being cruelly provoking, and me running into this room desperate—As soon as ever I had barred the door, utter blackness overwhelmed me, and I fell on the floor—I couldn't explain to Edgar how certain I felt of having a fit, or going raging mad, if he persisted in teasing me! I had no command of tongue, or brain, and he did not guess my agony, perhaps, it barely left me sense to try to escape from him and his voice—Before I recovered sufficiently to see, and hear, it began to be dawn, and, Nelly, I'll tell you what I thought, and what has kept recurring and recurring till I feared for my reason—I thought as I lay there, with my head against that table leg, and my eyes dimly discerning the grey square of the window, that I was enclosed in the oak-panelled bed at home, and my heart ached with some great grief which, just waking, I could not recollect—I pondered, and worried myself to discover what it could be, and most strangely, the whole last seven years of my life grew a blank! I did not recall that they had been at all I was a child, my father was just buried, and my misery arose from the separation that Hindley had ordered between me, and Heathcliff—I was laid alone, for the first time, and, rousing from a dismal doze after a night of weeping—I lifted my hand to push the panels aside, it struck the table-top! I swept it along the carpet, and then, memory burst in—my late anguish was swallowed in a paroxysm of despair—I cannot say why I felt so wildly wretched—it must have been temporary derangement for there is scarcely cause—But, supposing at twelve years old, I had been wrenched from the Heights, and every early association, and my all in all, as Heathcliff was at that time, and been converted, at a stroke into Mrs Linton, the lady of Thrushcross Grange, and the wife of a stranger, an exile, and outcast, thenceforth, from what had been my world—You may fancy a glimpse of the abyss where I grovelled! Shake your head, as you will, Nelly, you have helped to unsettle me! You should have spoken to Edgar, indeed you should, and compelled him to leave me quiet! Oh, I'm burning! I wish I were out of doors—I wish I were a girl again, half savage and hardy, and free and laughing at injuries, not maddening under them! Why am I so changed? why does my blood rush into a hell of tumult at a few words? I'm sure I should be myself were I once among the heather on those hills Open the window again wide, fasten it open! Quick, why don't you move?"

"Because I won't give you your death of cold," I answered

"You won't give me a chance of life, you mean," she added sullenly "However, I'm not helpless yet, I'll open it myself "

And sliding from the bed before I could hinder her, she crossed the room, walking very uncertainly, threw it back, and bent out, careless of the frosty air that cut about her shoulders as keen as a knife

I entreated, and finally attempted to force her to retire But I soon found her delirious strength much surpassed mine, (she was delirious, I became convinced by her subsequent actions, and ravings )

There was no moon, and everything beneath lay in misty darkness, not a light gleamed from any house, far or near, all had been extinguished long ago, and those at Wuthering Heights were never visible still she asserted she caught their shining

"Look!" she cried eagerly, "that's my room, with the candle in it, and the trees swaying before it and the other candle is in Joseph's garret Joseph sits up late, doesn't he? He's waiting till I come home that he may lock the gate Well, he'll wait a while yet It's a rough journey, and a sad heart to travel it, and we must pass by Gimmerton Kirk, to go that journey! We've braved its ghosts often together, and dared each other to stand among the graves and ask them to come But Heathcliff, if I dare you now, will you venture? If you do, I'll keep you I'll not lie there by myself they may bury me twelve feet deep, and throw the church down over me, but I won't rest till you are with me I never will!"

She paused, and resumed with a strange smile "He's considering he'd rather I'd come to him! Find a way, then! not through that Kirkyard You are slow! Be content, you always followed me!"

Perceiving it vain to argue against her insanity, I was planning how I could reach something to wrap about her, without quitting my hold of herself, for I could not trust her alone by the gaping lattice, when, to my consternation, I heard the rattle of the door-handle, and Mr Linton entered He had only then come from the library, and, in passing through the lobby, had noticed our talking and been attracted by curiosity, or fear, to examine what it signified, at that late hour

"Oh, sir!" I cried, checking the exclamation risen to his lips at the sight which met him, and the bleak atmosphere of the chamber

"My poor Mistress is ill, and she quite masters me, I cannot manage her at all, pray, come and persuade her to go to bed Forget your anger, for she's hard to guide any way but her own"

"Catherine ill?" he said, hastening to us "Shut the window, Ellen! Catherine! why"

He was silent, the haggardness of Mrs Linton's appearance smote him speechless, and he could only glance from her to me in horrified astonishment

"She's been fretting here," I continued, "and eating scarcely anything, and never complaining, she would admit none of us till this evening, and so we couldn't inform you of her state, as we were not aware of it ourselves, but it is nothing."

I felt I uttered my explanations awkwardly, the master frowned "It is nothing, is it, Ellen Dean?" he said sternly "You shall account more clearly for keeping me ignorant of this!" And he took his wife in his arms, and looked at her with anguish

At first she gave him no glance of recognition he was invisible to her abstracted gaze The delirium was not fixed, however, having weaned her eyes from contemplating the outer darkness, by degrees, she centred her attention on him, and discovered who it was that held her

"Ah! you are come, are you, Edgar Linton?" she said, with angry animation "You are one of those things that are ever found when least wanted, and when you are wanted, never! I suppose we shall have plenty of lamentations, now I see we shall but they can't keep me from my narrow home out yonder—My resting place where I'm bound before Spring is over! There it is, not among the Lintons, mind, under the chapel-roof, but in the open air with a head-stone, and you may please yourself, whether you go to them, or come to me!"

"Catherine, what have you done?" commenced the master "Am I nothing to you, any more? Do you love that wretch, Heath——"

"Hush!" cried Mrs Linton "Hush, this moment! You mention that name and I end the matter, instantly, by a spring from the window! What you touch at present you may have, but my soul will be on that hill-top before you lay hands on me again I don't want you, Edgar, I'm past wanting you Return to your books I'm glad you possess a consolation, for all you had in me is gone"

"Her mind wanders, sir," I interposed "She has been talking nonsense the whole evening, but let her have quiet and proper attendance, and she'll rally Hereafter, we must be cautious how we vex her"

"I desire no further advice from you," answered Mr Linton "You knew your mistress's nature, and you encouraged me to harass her And not to give me one hint of how she has been these three days! It was heartless! months of sickness could not cause such a change!"

I began to defend myself, thinking it too bad to be blamed for another's wicked waywardness!

"I knew Mrs Linton's nature to be headstrong and domineering," cried I, "but I didn't know that you wished to foster her fierce temper! I didn't know that, to humour her, I should wink at Mr Heathcliff. I performed the duty of a faithful servant in telling you, and I have got a faithful servant's wages! Well, it will teach me to be careful next time. Next time you may gather intelligence for yourself!"

"The next time you bring a tale to me, you shall quit my service, Ellen Dean," he replied.

"You'd rather hear nothing about it, I suppose, then, Mr Linton?" said I. "Heathcliff has your permission to come a courting to Miss, and to drop in at every opportunity your absence offers, on purpose to poison the mistress against you?"

Confused as Catherine was, her wits were alert at applying our conversation.

"Ah! Nelly has played traitor," she exclaimed, passionately. "Nelly is my hidden enemy—you witch! So you do seek elf-bolts to hurt us! Let me go, and I'll make her rue! I'll make her howl a recantation!"

A maniac's fury kindled under her brows, she struggled desperately to disengage herself from Linton's arms. I felt no inclination to tarry the event, and resolving to seek medical aid on my own responsibility, I quitted the chamber.

In passing the garden to reach the road, at a place where a bridle hook is driven into the wall, I saw something white moved irregularly, evidently by another agent than the wind. Notwithstanding my hurry, I stayed to examine it, lest ever after I should have the conviction impressed on my imagination that it was a creature of the other world.

My surprise and perplexity were great to discover, by touch more than vision, Miss Isabella's springer Fanny, suspended to a handkerchief, and nearly at its last gasp.

I quickly released the animal, and lifted it into the garden. I had seen it follow its mistress up-stairs, when she went to bed, and wondered much how it could have got out there, and what mischievous person had treated it so.

While untying the knot round the hook, it seemed to me that I repeatedly caught the beat of horses' feet galloping at some distance, but there was such a number of things to occupy my reflections that I hardly gave the circumstance a thought, though it was a strange sound, in that place, at two o'clock in the morning.

Mr Kenneth was fortunately just issuing from his house to see a patient in the village as I came up the street, and my account of Catherine Linton's malady induced him to accompany me back immediately

He was a plain rough man, and he made no scruple to speak his doubts of her surviving this second attack, unless she were more submissive to his directions than she had shown herself before

"Nelly Dean," said he, "I can't help fancying there's an extra cause for this. What has there been to do at the Grange? We've odd reports up here. A stout, hearty lass like Catherine does not fall ill for a trifle, and that sort of people should not either. It's hard work bringing them through fevers, and such things. How did it begin?"

"The master will inform you," I answered, "but you are acquainted with the Earnshaws' violent dispositions, and Mrs Linton caps them all. I may say this, it commenced in a quarrel. She was struck during a tempest of passion with a kind of fit. That's her account, at least, for she flew off in the height of it, and locked herself up. Afterwards, she refused to eat, and now she alternately raves, and remains in a half dream, knowing those about her, but having her mind filled with all sorts of strange ideas and illusions."

"Mr Linton will be sorry?" observed Kenneth, interrogatively

"Sorry? he'll break his heart should anything happen!" I replied. "Don't alarm him more than necessary."

"Well, I told him to beware," said my companion, "and he must bide the consequences of neglecting my warning! Hasn't he been thick with Mr Heathcliff lately?"

"Heathcliff frequently visits at the Grange," answered I, "though more on the strength of the mistress having known him when a boy, than because the master likes his company. At present, he's discharged from the trouble of calling, owing to some presumptuous aspirations after Miss Linton which he manifested. I hardly think he'll be taken in again."

"And does Miss Linton turn a cold shoulder on him?" was the doctor's next question

"I'm not in her confidence," returned I, reluctant to continue the subject

"No, she's a sly one," he remarked, shaking his head. "She keeps her own counsel! But she's a real little fool. I have it from good authority, that, last night, and a pretty night it was! she and Heathcliff were walking in the plantation at the back of your house, above two hours, and he pressed her not to go in again, but just mount his horse and away with him! My informant said she could only put him off by pledging her word of honour to be prepared on their first meeting after that, when it was to be, he didn't hear, but you urge Mr Linton to look sharp!"

This news filled me with fresh fears. I outstripped Kenneth, and ran most of the way back. The little dog was yelping in the garden yet. I spared a minute to open the gate for it, but instead of going to the house door, it coursed up and down snuffing the grass, and would have escaped to the road, had I not seized and conveyed it in with me.

On ascending to Isabella's room, my suspicions were confirmed, it was empty. Had I been a few hours sooner, Mrs Linton's illness might have arrested her rash step. But what could be done now? There was a bare possibility of overtaking them if pursued instantly. I could not pursue them, however, and I dare not rouse the family, and fill the place with confusion, still less unfold the business to my master, absorbed as he was in his present calamity, and having no heart to spare for a second grief!

I saw nothing for it, but to hold my tongue, and suffer matters to take their course. and Kenneth being arrived, I went with a badly composed countenance to announce him.

Catherine lay in a troubled sleep, her husband had succeeded in soothing the access of frenzy, he now hung over her pillow, watching every shade, and every change of her painfully expressive features.

The doctor, on examining the case for himself, spoke hopefully to him of its having a favourable termination, if we could only preserve around her perfect and constant tranquillity. To me, he signified the threatening danger was, not so much death, as permanent alienation of intellect.

I did not close my eyes that night, nor did Mr Linton, indeed, we never went to bed. and the servants were all up long before the usual hour, moving through the house with stealthy tread, and exchanging whispers as they encountered each other in their vocations. Every one was active, but Miss Isabella, and they began to remark how sound she slept—her brother too asked if she had risen, and seemed impatient for her presence, and hurt that she showed so little anxiety for her sister-in-law.

I trembled lest he should send me to call her, but I was spared

the pain of being the first proclamaunt of her flight One of the maids, a thoughtless girl, who had been on an early errand to Gimmerton, came panting up stairs, open-mouthed, and dashed into the chamber, crying,

"Oh, dear dear! What mun we have next? Master, master, our young lady——"

'Hold your noise!' cried I hastily enraged at her clamorous manner

"Speak lower Mary—What is the matter?" said Mr Linton "What ails your young lady?"

'She's gone, she's gone! Yon' Heathcliff's run off wi' her!' gasped the girl

"That is not true!" exclaimed Linton rising in agitation "It cannot be—how has the idea entered your head? Ellen Dean, go and seek her—it is incredible—it cannot be"

As he spoke he took the servant to the door, and, then, repeated his demand to know her reasons for such an assertion

"Why, I met on the road a lad that fetches milk here" she stammered, "and he asked whether we weren't in trouble at the Grange—I thought he meant for Missis's sickness, so I answered yes Then says he, 'They's some body gone after em I guess?' I stared He saw I knew naught about it and he told how a gentleman and lady had stopped to have a horse's shoe fastened at a blacksmith's shop, two miles out of Gimmerton, not very long after midnight! and how the blacksmith's lass had got up to spy who they were she knew them both directly—And she noticed the man, Heathcliff it was, she felt certain, nob'dy could mistake him, besides—put a sovereign in her father's hand for payment The lady had a cloak about her face, but having desired a sup of water, while she drank, it fell back, and she saw her very plain—Heathcliff held both bridles as they rode on, and they set their faces from the village, and went as fast as the rough roads would let them The lass said nothing to her father, but she told it all over Gimmerton this morning"

I ran and peeped, for form's sake into Isabella's room confirming, when I returned, the servant's statement—Mr Linton had resumed his seat by the bed, on my re-entrance, he raised his eyes, read the meaning of my blank aspect, and dropped them without giving an order, or uttering a word

"Are we to try any measures for overtaking and bringing her back?" I inquired "How should we do?"

"She went of her own accord," answered the master, "she had a right to go if she pleased—Trouble me no more about her—Hereafter she is only my sister in name, not because I disown her, but because she has disowned me"

And that was all he said on the subject, he did not make a single inquiry further, or mention her in any way, except directing me to send what property she had in the house to her fresh home, wherever it was, when I knew it

---

CHAPTER XIII

---

FOR TWO MONTHS the fugitives remained absent, in those two months, Mrs Linton encountered and conquered the worst shock of what was denominated a brain fever No mother could have nursed an only child more devotedly than Edgar tended her Day and night, he was watching, and patiently enduring all the annoyances that irritable nerves and a shaken reason could inflict and, though Kenneth remarked that what he saved from the grave would only recompense his care by forming the source of constant future anxiety, in fact, that his health and strength were being sacrificed to preserve a mere ruin of humanity, he knew no limits in gratitude and joy, when Catherine's life was declared out of danger, and hour after hour, he would sit beside her, tracing the gradual return to bodily health, and flattering his too sanguine hopes with the illusion that her mind would settle back to its right balance also, and she would soon be entirely her former self

The first time she left her chamber, was at the commencement of the following March Mr Linton had put on her pillow, in the morning, a handful of golden crocuses, her eye, long stranger to any gleam of pleasure, caught them in waking, and shone delighted as she gathered them eagerly together

"These are the earliest flowers at the Heights!" she exclaimed "They remind me of soft thaw winds, and warm sunshine, and nearly melted snow—Edgar, is there not a south wind, and is not the snow almost gone?"

"The snow is quite gone down here, darling!" replied her husband, "and I only see two white spots on the whole range of moors—The sky is blue, and the larks are singing, and the beck and brooks are all brim full Catherine, last spring at this time, I was longing to have you under this roof—now, I wish you were a mile or two up those hills, the air blows so sweetly, I feel that it would cure you "

"I shall never be there, but once more!" said the invalid, "and then you'll leave me, and I shall remain, for ever Next spring you'll long again to have me under this roof, and you'll look back and think you were happy to-day "

Linton lavished on her the kindest caresses, and tried to cheer her by the fondest words, but, vaguely regarding the flowers, she let the tears collect on her lashes, and stream down her cheeks unheeding

We knew she was really better, and therefore decided that long confinement to a single place produced much of this despondency, and it might be partially removed by a change of scene

The master told me to light a fire in the many-weeks-deserted parlour, and to set an easy-chair in the sunshine by the window, and then he brought her down, and she sat a long while enjoying the genial heat, and, as we expected, revived by the objects round her, which, though familiar, were free from the dreary associations investing her hated sick-chamber By evening, she seemed greatly exhausted, yet no arguments could persuade her to return to that apartment, and I had to arrange the parlour sofa for her bed, till another room could be prepared

To obviate the fatigue of mounting and descending the stairs, we fitted up this, where you lie at present, on the same floor with the parlour and she was soon strong enough to move from one to the other, leaning on Edgar's arm

Ah, I thought myself, she might recover, so waited on as she was And there was double cause to desire it, for on her existence depended that of another, we cherished the hope that in a little while, Mr Linton's heart would be gladdened, and his lands secured from a stranger's gripe, by the birth of an heir

I should mention that Isabella sent to her brother, some six weeks from her departure a short note, announcing her marriage with Heathcliff It appeared dry and cold, but at the bottom, was dotted in with pencil, an obscure apology, and an entreaty for kind remembrance, and reconciliation, if her proceeding had offended him, asserting that she could not help it then, and being done, she had now no power to repeal it

Linton did not reply to this, I believe, and in a fortnight more, I got a long letter which I considered odd coming from the pen of a bride just out of the honeymoon I'll read it, for I keep it yet Any relic of the dead is precious, if they were valued living

DEAR ELLEN, it begins

I came last night to Wuthering Heights, and heard, for the first time, that Catherine has been, and is yet, very ill I must not write to her I suppose, and my brother is either too angry, or too distressed to answer what I send him Still, I must write to somebody, and the only choice left me is you

Inform Edgar that I'd give the world to see his face again—that my heart returned to Thrushcross Grange in twenty-four hours after I left it, and is there at this moment, full of warm feelings for him and Catherine! I can't follow it though—(those words are underlined)—they need not expect me, and they may draw what conclusions they please, taking care however, to lay nothing at the door of my weak will, or deficient affection

The remainder of the letter is for yourself alone I want to ask you two questions the first is,

How did you contrive to preserve the common sympathies of human nature when you resided here? I cannot recognize any sentiment which those around, share with me

The second question, I have great interest in, it is this—

Is Mr Heathcliff a man? If so, is he mad? And if not, is he a devil? I shan't tell my reasons for making this inquiry, but, I beseech you to explain, if you can, what I have married—that is, when you call to see me, and you must call, Ellen, very soon Don't write, but come, and bring me something from Edgar

Now, you shall hear how I have been received in my new home, as I am led to imagine the Heights will be It is to amuse myself that I dwell on such subjects as the lack of external comforts, they never occupy my thoughts, except at the moment when I miss them—I should laugh and dance for joy, if I found their absence was the total of my miseries, and the rest was an unnatural dream!

The sun set behind the Grange, as we turned on to the moors, by that, I judged it to be six o'clock, and my companion halted half-an-hour, to inspect the park, and the gardens, and, probably, the place itself, as well as he could, so it was dark when we dismounted in the paved yard of the farmhouse, and your old fellow-servant, Joseph, issued out to receive us by the light of a dip candle. He did it with a courtesy that redounded to his credit. His first act was to elevate his torch to a level with my face, squint malignantly, project his upper lip, and turn away.

Then he took the two horses, and led them into the stables, reappearing for the purpose of locking the outer gate, as if we lived in an ancient castle.

Heathcliff stayed to speak to him, and I entered the kitchen—a dingy, untidy hole, I dare say you would not know it, it is so changed since it was in your charge.

By the fire stood a ruffianly child, strong in limb, and dirty in garb, with a look of Catherine in his eyes, and about his mouth.

"This is Edgar's legal nephew," I reflected—"mine in a manner, I must shake hands, and—yes—I must kiss him. It is right to establish a good understanding at the beginning."

I approached, and, attempting to take his chubby fist, said—"How do you do, my dear?"

He replied in a jargon I did not comprehend.

"Shall you and I be friends, Hareton?" was my next essay at conversation.

An oath, and a threat to set Throttler on me if I did not "frame off" rewarded my perseverance.

"Hey, Throttler, lad!" whispered the little wretch, rousing a half-bred bull-dog from its lair in a corner. "Now, wilt tuh be ganging?" he asked authoritatively.

Love for my life urged a compliance, I stepped over the threshold to wait till the others should enter. Mr Heathcliff was nowhere visible, and Joseph, whom I followed to the stables, and requested to accompany me in, after staring and muttering to himself, screwed up his nose, and replied—

"Mim! mim! mim! Did iver Christian body hear owt like it? Minching un' munching! Hah can Aw tell whet ye say?"

"I say, I wish you to come with me into the house!" I cried, thinking him deaf, yet highly disgusted at his rudeness.

"Nor nuh me! Aw gotten summut else to do," he answered, and continued his work, moving his lantern jaws meanwhile, and surveying my dress and countenance (the former a great deal too fine, but the latter, I'm sure, as sad as he could desire) with sovereign contempt

I walked round the yard, and through a wicket, to another door, at which I took the liberty of knocking, in hopes some more civil servant might show himself

After a short suspense it was opened by a tall, gaunt man, without neckerchief, and otherwise extremely slovenly, his features were lost in masses of shaggy hair that hung on his shoulders, and his eyes, too, were like a ghostly Catherine's, with all their beauty annihilated

"What's your business here?" he demanded, grimly "Who are you?"

"My name was Isabella Linton," I replied "You've seen me before, sir I'm lately married to Mr Heathcliff, and he has brought me here—I suppose by your permission"

"Is he come back, then?" asked the hermit, glaring like a hungry wolf

"Yes—we came just now," I said, "but he left me by the kitchen door, and when I would have gone in, your little boy played sentinel over the place, and frightened me off by the help of a bull-dog"

"It's well the hellish villain has kept his word!" growled my future host, searching the darkness beyond me in expectation of discovering Heathcliff, and then he indulged in a soliloquy of execrations, and threats of what he would have done had the "fiend" deceived him

I repented having tried this second entrance, and was almost inclined to slip away before he finished cursing, but ere I could execute that intention, he ordered me in, and shut and re-fastened the door

There was a great fire, and that was all the light in the huge apartment, whose floor had grown a uniform grey, and the once brilliant pewter dishes which used to attract my gaze when I was a girl partook of a similar obscurity, created by tarnish and dust

I inquired whether I might call the maid, and be conducted to my bed-room? Mr Earnshaw vouchsafed no answer He walked up and down, with his hands in his pockets, apparently quite forgetting my presence, and his abstraction was evidently so deep, and his whole aspect so misanthropical, that I shrank from disturbing him again

You'll not be surprised, Ellen, at my feeling particularly cheerless, seated in worse than solitude, on that inhospitable hearth, and remembering that four miles distant lay my delightful home, containing the only people I loved on earth and there might as well be the Atlantic to part us, instead of those four miles, I could not overpass them!

I questioned with myself—where must I turn for comfort? and—mind you don't tell Edgar, or Catherine—above every sorrow beside, this rose pre-eminent—despair at finding nobody who could or would be my ally against Heathcliff!

I had sought shelter at Wuthering Heights, almost gladly, because I was secured by that arrangement from living alone with him, but he knew the people we were coming amongst, and he did not fear their intermeddling.

I sat and thought a doleful time, the clock struck eight, and nine, and still my companion paced to and fro, his head bent on his breast, and perfectly silent, unless a groan, or a bitter ejaculation forced itself out at intervals.

I listened to detect a woman's voice in the house, and filled the interim with wild regrets, and dismal anticipations, which, at last, spoke audibly in irrepressible sighing, and weeping.

I was not aware how openly I grieved, till Earnshaw halted opposite, in his measured walk, and gave me a stare of newly awakened surprise. Taking advantage of his recovered attention, I exclaimed—

"I'm tired with my journey, and I want to go to bed! Where is the maid-servant? Direct me to her, as she won't come to me!"

"We have none," he answered, "you must wait on yourself!"

"Where must I sleep, then?" I sobbed—I was beyond regarding self-respect, weighed down by fatigue and wretchedness.

"Joseph will show you Heathcliff's chamber," said he, "open that door—he's in there."

I was going to obey, but he suddenly arrested me, and added in the strangest tone—

"Be so good as to turn your lock, and draw your bolt—don't omit it!"

"Well!" I said "But why, Mr Earnshaw?" I did not relish the notion of deliberately fastening my self in with Heathcliff.

"Look here!" he replied, pulling from his waistcoat a curiously constructed pistol, having a double edged spring knife attached to the barrel. "That's a great tempter to a desperate man, is it not? I cannot resist going up with this every night, and trying his door. If once I find it open he's done for! I do it invariably, even though the minute before I have been recalling a hundred reasons that should make me refrain—it is some devil that urges me to thwart my own schemes by killing him—you fight against that devil, for love, as long as you may, when the time comes, not all the angels in heaven shall save him!"

I surveyed the weapon inquisitively,—a hideous notion struck me. How powerful I should be possessing such an instrument! I took it from his hand, and touched the blade. He looked astonished at the expression my face assumed during a brief second. It was not horror, it was covetousness. He snatched the pistol back, jealously, shut the knife, and returned it to its concealment.

"I don't care if you tell him," said he. "Put him on his guard, and watch for him. You know the terms we are on, I see, his danger does not shock you."

"What has Heathcliff done to you?" I asked. "In what has he wronged you, to warrant this appalling hatred? Wouldn't it be wiser to bid him quit the house?"

"No!" thundered Earnshaw, "should he offer to leave me, he's a dead man, persuade him to attempt it, and you are a murderess! Am I to lose all, without a chance of retrieval? Is Hareton to be a beggar? Oh, damnation! I will have it back, and I'll have his gold too, and then his blood, and hell shall have his soul! It will be ten times blacker with that guest than ever it was before!"

You've acquainted me, Ellen, with your old master's habits. He is clearly on the verge of madness—he was so, last night, at least. I shuddered to be near him, and thought on the servant's ill-bred moroseness as comparatively agreeable.

He now recommenced his moody walk, and I raised the latch, and escaped into the kitchen.

Joseph was bending over the fire, peering into a large pan that swung above it, and a wooden bowl of oatmeal stood on the settle close by. The contents of the pan began to boil, and he turned to plunge his hand into the bowl, I conjectured that this preparation was probably for our supper, and, being hungry, I resolved it should be eatable—so, crying out, sharply—"I'll make the porridge!" I removed the vessel out of his reach, and proceeded to take off my hat and riding habit. "Mr Earnshaw," I continued, "directs me to wait on myself—I will—I'm not going to act the lady among you, for fear I should starve."

"Gooid Lord!" he muttered, sitting down, and stoking his ribbed stockings from the knee to the ankle "If they's tuh be fresh ortherings—just when Aw gotten used tuh two maisters, if Aw mun hev a mistress set o'er my heead, it's loike time tuh be flitting Aw niver did think tuh say t' dav ut Aw mud lave th' owld place—but Aw daht it's nigh at hend!"

This lamentation drew no notice from me, I went briskly to work, sighing to remember a period when it would have been all merry fun, but compelled speedily to drive off the remembrance. It racked me to recall past happiness, and the greater peril there was of conjuring up its apparition, the quicker the tubble ran round, and the faster the handfuls of meal fell into the water.

Joseph beheld my style of cookery with growing indignation.

"Thear!" he ejaculated, 'Hareton, thah willn't sup thv porridge tuh neeght, they'll be nowt bud lumps as big as maw nave Thear, agean! Aw'd fling in bowl un all if Aw wer yah! Thear, pale t' gulp off, un' then yah'll hae done wi't Bang, bang. It's a marcy t' bothom isn't deaved aht!"

It was rather a rough mess, I own, when poured into the basins, four had been provided, and a gallon pitcher of new milk was brought from the dairy, which Hareton seized and commenced drinking and spilling from the expansive lip.

I expostulated, and desired that he should have his in a mug, affirming that I could not taste the liquid treated so dirtily. The old cynic chose to be vastly offended at this nicety, assuring me, repeatedly, that "the barn was every bit as gooid" as I, "and every bit as wolsome," and wondering how I could fashion to be so conceited, meanwhile, the infant ruffian continued sucking, and glowered up at me defyingly, as he slavered into the jug.

"I shall have my supper in another room," I said "Have you no place you call a parlour?"

"Parlour!" he echoed, sneeringly, "parlour! Nay, we've noa parlours. If yah dunnut loike wer company, they's master's, un' if yah dunnu loike maister, they's us."

"Then I shall go up-stairs," I answered, "show me a chamber."

I put my basin on a tray, and went myself to fetch some more milk.

With great grumblings, the fellow rose, and preceded me in my ascent. We mounted to the garrets, he opening a door, now and then, to look into the apartments we passed.

"Here's a rahm," he said, at last, flinging back a cranky board on hinges "It's weel enOUGH tuh ate a few porridge in They's a pack uh corn i' t' corner, thear, meeterly clane, if yah're feared uh muckying yer grand silk cloes, spread her hankerchur ut t' top on't"

The "rahm" was a kind of lumber-hole smelling strong of malt and grain, various sacks of which articles were piled around, leaving a wide, bare space in the middle

"Why, man!" I exclaimed, facing him angrily, "this is not a place to sleep in I wish to see my bed-room"

"Bed-rume!" he repeated, in a tone of mockery "Yah's see all t' bed-rumes thear is—yon's mine"

He pointed into the second garret, only differing from the first in being more naked about the walls, and having a large, low, curtainless bed, with an indigo-coloured quilt, at one end

"What do I want with yours?" I retorted "I suppose Mr Heathcliff does not lodge at the top of the house, does he?"

"Oh! it's Master Hathecliff's yah're wenting!" cried he, as if making a new discovery "Couldn't ye uh said soa, at onst' un' then, Aw mud ha' telled ye, baht all this wark, ut that's just one yah cannut sea—he allas keeps it locked, un' nob'dy iver mells on't but husseln"

"You've a nice house, Joseph," I could not refrain from observing, "and pleasant inmates, and I think the concentrated essence of all the madness in the world took up its abode in my brain the day I linked my fate with theirs! However, that is not to the present purpose—there are other rooms For Heaven's sake, be quick, and let me settle somewhere!"

He made no reply to this adjuration, only plodding doggedly down the wooden steps, and halting before an apartment which, from that halt, and the superior quality of its furniture, I conjectured to be the best one

There was a carpet, a good one, but the pattern was obliterated by dust, a fire-place hung with cut paper dropping to pieces, a handsome oak-bedstead with ample crimson curtains of rather expensive material, and modern make But they had evidently experienced rough usage, the valances hung in festoons, wrenched from their rings, and the iron rod supporting them was bent in an arc, on one side, causing the drapery to trail upon the floor The chairs were also damaged, many of them severely, and deep indentations deformed the panels of the walls

I was endeavouring to gather resolution for entering, and taking possession, when my fool of a guide announced—

“This here is t’ maister’s”

My supper by this time was cold, my appetite gone, and my patience exhausted I insisted on being provided instantly with a place of refuge, and means of repose

“Whear the divil,” began the religious elder “The Lord bless us! The Lord forgie us! Whear the hell, wold ye gang? ye married, wearisome nowt! Yah seen all bud Hareton’s bit uf a cham’er There’s nut another hoile tuh lig dahn in i’ th’ hahse!”

I was so vexed, I flung my tray and its contents on the ground, and then seated myself at the stairs-head, hid my face in my hands, and cried

“Ech! ech!” exclaimed Joseph “Weel done, Miss Cathy! weel done, Miss Cathy! Hahsiver, t’ maister sall just tum’le o’er them brocken pots, un’ then we’s hear summut, we’s hear hah it’s tuh be Gooid-for-nowt madling! vah desurve pining froo this tuh Churstmás, flinging t’ precious gifts uh God under foot i’ yer flaysome rages! Bud, Aw’m mista’en if yah shew yer sperrit long Will Hathecliff bide sich bonny ways, think ye? Aw nobbut wish he muh catch ye i’ that plisky Aw nobbut wish he may”

And so he went scolding to his den beneath, taking the candle with him, and I remained in the dark

The period of reflection succeeding this silly action compelled me to admit the necessity of smothering my pride, and choking my wrath, and bestirring myself to remove its effects

An unexpected aid presently appeared in the shape of Throttler, whom I now recognized as a son of our old Skulker, it had spent its whelphood at the Grange, and was given by my father to Mr Hindley I fancy it knew me—it pushed its nose against mine by way of salute, and then hastened to devour the porridge, while I groped from step to step, collecting the shattered earthenware, and drying the splatters of milk from the bannisters with my pocket-handkerchief

Our labours were scarcely over when I heard Earnshaw’s tread in the passage, my assistant tucked in his tail, and pressed to the wall, I stole into the nearest doorway The dog’s endeavour to avoid him was unsuccessful, as I guessed by a scutter down stairs, and a prolonged, piteous yelping I had better luck He passed on, entered his chamber, and shut the door

Directly after Joseph came up with Hareton, to put him to bed I had found shelter in Hareton's room, and the old man on seeing me, said—

"They's rahm fur boath yah, un' yer pride, nah, Aw sud think i' the' hahse It's empty, yah muh hev it all tuh yerseln, un Him as allas makes a third, i' sich ill company!"

Gladly did I take advantage of this intimation, and the minute I flung myself into a chair, by the fire, I nodded, and slept

My slumber was deep, and sweet, though over far too soon Mr Heathcliff awoke me, he had just come in, and demanded, in his loving manner, what I was doing there

I told him the cause of my staying up so late—that he had the key of our room in his pocket

The adjective own gave mortal offence He swore it was not, nor ever should be mine, and he'd—but I'll not repeat his language, nor describe his habitual conduct, he is ingenious and unrelenting in seeking to gain my abhorrence! I sometimes wonder at him with an intensity that deadens my fear yet, I assure you, a tiger, or a venomous serpent could not rouse terror in me equal to that which he wakens He told me of Catherine's illness, and accused my brother of causing it, promising that I should be Edgar's proxy in suffering, till he could get a hold of him

I do hate him—I am wretched—I have been a fool! Beware of uttering one breath of this to any one at the Grange I shall expect you every day—don't disappoint me!

ISABELLA

CHAPTER XIV

As soon as I had perused this epistle, I went to the master, and informed him that his sister had arrived at the Heights, and sent me a letter expressing her sorrow for Mrs Linton's situation, and her ardent desire to see him, with a wish that he would transmit to her, as early as possible, some token of forgiveness by me

"Forgiveness?" said Linton, "I have nothing to forgive her, Ellen—you may call at Wuthering Heights this afternoon, if you like, and say that I am not angry, but I'm sorry to have lost her especially as I can never think she'll be happy. It is out of the question my going to see her, however, we are eternally divided, and should she really wish to oblige me, let her persuade the villain she has married to leave the country."

"And you won't write her a little note, sir?" I asked, imploringly.

"No," he answered. "It is needless. My communication with Heathcliff's family shall be as sparing as his with mine. It shall not exist!"

Mr Edgar's coldness depressed me exceedingly, and all the way from the Grange, I puzzled my brains how to put more heart into what he said, when I repeated it, and how to soften his refusal of even a few lines to console Isabella.

I dare say she had been on the watch for me since morning. I saw her looking through the lattice, as I came up the garden causeway, and I nodded to her, but she drew back, as if afraid of being observed.

I entered without knocking. There never was such a dreary, dismal scene as the formerly cheerful house presented! I must confess that, if I had been in the young lady's place, I would, at least, have swept the hearth, and wiped the tables with a duster. But she already partook of the pervading spirit of neglect which encompassed her. Her pretty face was wan and listless, her hair uncurled, some locks hanging lankly down, and some carelessly twisted round her head. Probably she had not touched her dress since yester evening.

Hindley was not there. Mr Heathcliff sat at a table, turning over some papers in his pocket-book, but he rose when I appeared, asked me how I did, quite friendly, and offered me a chair.

He was the only thing there that seemed decent, and I thought he never looked better. So much had circumstances altered their positions, that he would certainly have struck a stranger as a born and bred gentleman, and his wife as a thorough little slattern!

She came forward eagerly to greet me, and held out one hand to take the expected letter.

I shook my head. She wouldn't understand the hint, but followed me to a sideboard, where I went to lay my bonnet, and importuned me in a whisper to give her directly what I had brought.

Heathcliff guessed the meaning of her manoeuvres, and said—

"If you have got anything for Isabella, as no doubt you have, Nelly, give it to her. You needn't make a secret of it, we have no secrets between us."

"Oh, I have nothing," I replied, thinking it best to speak the truth at once. "My master bid me tell his sister that she must not expect either a letter or a visit from him at present. He sends his love, ma'am, and his wishes for your happiness, and his pardon for the grief you have occasioned, but he thinks that after this time, his household, and the household here, should drop intercommunication, as nothing could come of keeping it up."

Mrs Heathcliff's lip quivered slightly, and she returned to her seat in the window. Her husband took his stand on the hearthstone, near me, and began to put questions concerning Catherine.

I told him as much as I thought proper of her illness, and he extorted from me, by cross-examination, most of the facts connected with its origin.

I blamed her, as she deserved, for bringing it all on herself, and ended by hoping that he would follow Mr Linton's example, and avoid future interference with his family, for good or evil.

"Mrs Linton is now just recovering," I said, "she'll never be like she was, but her life is spared, and if you really have a regard for her, you'll shun crossing her way again. Nay, you'll move out of this country entirely, and that you may not regret it, I'll inform you Catherine Linton is as different now, from your old friend Catherine Earnshaw, as that young lady is different from me! Her appearance is changed greatly, her character much more so, and the person, who is compelled, of necessity, to be her companion, will only sustain his affection hereafter, by the remembrance of what she once was, by common humanity, and a sense of duty!"

"That is quite possible," remarked Heathcliff, forcing himself to seem calm, "quite possible that your master should have nothing but common humanity, and a sense of duty to fall back upon. But do you imagine that I shall leave Catherine to his duty and humanity? and can you compare my feelings respecting Catherine, to his? Before you leave this house, I must exact a promise from you, that you'll get me an interview with her—consent, or refuse, I will see her! What do you say?"

"I say, Mr Heathcliff," I replied, "you must not—you never shall through my means. Another encounter between you and the master, would kill her altogether!"

"With your aid, that may be avoided," he continued, "and should there be danger of such an event—should he be the cause of adding a single trouble more to her existence—Why, I think, I shall be justified in going to extremes! I wish you had sincerity enough to tell me whether Catherine would suffer greatly from his loss. The fear that she would restrain me, and there you see the distinction between our feelings—Had he been in my place, and I in his, though I hated him with a hatred that turned my life to gall, I never would have raised a hand against him. You may look incredulous, if you please. I never would have banished him from her society, as long as she desired his. The moment her regard ceased, I would have torn his heart out, and drunk his blood! But, till then, if you don't believe me, you don't know me—till then, I would have died by inches before I touched a single hair of his head!"

"And yet," I interrupted, "you have no scruples in completely ruining all hopes of her perfect restoration, by thrusting yourself in to her remembrance, now, when she has nearly forgotten you, and involving her in a new tumult of discord, and distress."

"You suppose she has nearly forgotten me?" he said. "Oh! Nelly, you know she has not! You know as well as I do, that for every thought she spends on Linton, she spends a thousand on me! At a most miserable period of my life, I had a notion of the kind, it haunted me on my return to the neighborhood, last summer, but only her own assurance, could make me admit the horrible idea again. And then, Linton would be nothing, nor Hindley, nor all the dreams that ever I dreamt. Two words would comprehend my future—death and hell—existence, after losing her, would be hell."

"Yet I was a fool to fancy for a moment that she valued Edgar Linton's attachment more than mine—If he loved with all the powers of his puny being, he couldn't love as much in eighty years, as I could in a day. And Catherine has a heart as deep as I have, the sea could be as readily contained in that horse-trough as her whole affection be monopolized by him—Tush! He is scarcely a degree dearer to her than her dog, or her horse—It is not in him to be loved like me, how can she love in him what he has not?"

"Catherine and Edgar are as fond of each other, as any two people can be!" cried Isabella with sudden vivacity. "No one has a right to talk in that manner, and I won't hear my brother depreciated in silence!"

"Your brother is wondrous fond of you too, isn't he?" observed

Heathcliff scornfully "He turns you adrift on the world with surprising alacrity"

"He is not aware of what I suffer," she replied "I didn't tell him that"

"You have been telling him something, then—you have written, have you?"

"To say that I was married, I did write—you saw the note"

"And nothing since?"

"No"

"My young lady is looking sadly the worse for her change of condition," I remarked "Somebody's love comes short in her case, obviously—whose I may guess, but, perhaps, I shouldn't say"

"I should guess it was her own," said Heathcliff "She degenerates into a mere slut! She is tired of trying to please me, uncommonly early—You'd hardly credit it, but the very morrow of our wedding, she was weeping to go home However, she'll suit this house so much the better for not being over nice, and I'll take care she does not disgrace me by rambling abroad"

"Well, sir," returned I, "I hope you'll consider that Mrs Heathcliff is accustomed to be looked after, and waited on, and that she has been brought up like an only daughter whom every one was ready to serve—You must let her have a maid to keep things tidy about her, and you must treat her kindly—Whatever be your notion of Mr Edgar, you cannot doubt that she has a capacity for strong attachments or she wouldn't have abandoned the elegancies, and comforts, and friends of her former home, to fix contentedly, in such a wilderness as this, with you"

"She abandoned them under a delusion," he answered, "picturing in me a hero of romance, and expecting unlimited indulgences from my chivalrous devotion I can hardly regard her in the light of a rational creature, so obstinately has she persisted in forming a fabulous notion of my character, and acting on the false impressions she cherished But at last, I think she begins to know me—I don't perceive the silly smiles and grimaces that provoked me, at first, and the senseless incapability of discerning that I was in earnest when I gave her my opinion of her infatuation, and herself—It was a marvellous effort of perspicacity to discover that I did not love her I believed at one time, no lessons could teach her that! and yet it is poorly learnt, for this morning she announced, as a piece of appalling intelligence, that I had actually succeeded in making her hate me! A positive labour of Hercules, I assure you! If it be achieved, I have cause to return thanks—Can I trust your assertion, Isabella? are you sure you hate me? If I let you alone for half-a-day, won't you come sighing and wheedling to me again? I dare say she would rather I had seemed all tenderness before you, it wounds her vanity to have the truth exposed. But, I don't care who knows that the passion was wholly on one side, and I never told her a lie about it. She cannot accuse me of showing a bit of deceitful softness. The first thing she saw me do, on coming out of the Grange, was to hang up her little dog, and when she pleaded for it, the first words I uttered, were a wish that I had the hanging of every being belonging to her, except one possibly, she took that exception for herself—But no brutality disgusted her—I suppose, she has an innate admiration of it, if only her precious person were secure from injury! Now, was it not the depth of absurdity—of genuine idiocy, for that pitiful, slavish, mean-minded brach to dream that I could love her? Tell your master, Nelly, that I never, in all my life, met with such an abject thing as she is—She even disgraces the name of Linton, and I've sometimes relented, from pure lack of invention, in my experiments on what she could endure, and still creep shamefully cringing back! But tell him also, to set his fraternal and magisterial heart at ease, that I keep strictly within the limits of the law—I have avoided, up to this period, giving her the slightest right to claim a separation, and what's more, she'd thank nobody for dividing us—if she desired to go she might—the nuisance of her presence outweighs the gratification to be derived from tormenting her!”

“Mr Heathcliff,” said I, “this is the talk of a madman, and your wife most likely is convinced you are mad, and, for that reason, she has borne with you hitherto but now that you say she may go, she'll doubtless avail herself of the permission—You are not so bewitched, ma'am, are you, as to remain with him of your own accord?”

“Take care, Ellen!” answered Isabella, her eyes sparkling irefully—there was no misdoubting by their expression the full success of her partner's endeavours to make himself detested. “Don't put faith in a single word he speaks. He's a lying fiend, a monster, and not a human being! I've been told I might leave him before, and I've made the attempt, but I dare not repeat it! Only Ellen, promise you'll not mention a syllable of his infamous conversation to my brother or Catherine—whatever he may pretend, he wishes to provoke Edgar to desperation—he says he has married me on purpose to obtain power over him, and he shan't obtain it—I'll die first! I just hope, I pray that he may forget his diabolical prudence, and kill me! The single pleasure I can imagine is to die, or to see him dead!"

"There—that will do for the present!" said Heathcliff "If you are called upon in a court of law, you'll remember her language, Nelly! And take a good look at that countenance—she's near the point which would suit me No, you're not fit to be your own guardian, Isabella, now, and I, being your legal protector, must retain you in my custody, however distasteful the obligation may be—Go up-stairs, I have something to say to Ellen Dean, in private That's not the way—up-stairs, I tell you! Why this is the road up-stairs, child!"

He seized, and thrust her from the room, and returned muttering,

"I have no pity! I have no pity! The more the worms writhe, the more I yearn to crush out their entrails! It is a moral teething, and I grind with greater energy, in proportion to the increase of pain."

"Do you understand what the word pity means?" I said hastening to resume my bonnet "Did you ever feel a touch of it in your life?"

"Put that down!" he interrupted, perceiving my intention to depart "You are not going yet—Come here now, Nelly—I must either persuade, or compel you to aid me in fulfilling my determination to see Catherine, and that without delay—I swear that I meditate no harm, I don't desire to cause any disturbance, or to exasperate, or insult Mr Linton, I only wish to hear from herself how she is, and why she has been ill, and to ask, if anything that I could do would be of use to her Last night, I was in the Grange garden six hours, and I'll return there tonight, and every night I'll haunt the place, and every day, till I find an opportunity of entering If Edgar Linton meets me, I shall not hesitate to knock him down, and give him enough to insure his quiescence while I stay—If his servants oppose me, I shall threaten them off with these pistols—But wouldn't it be better to prevent my coming in contact with them, or their master? And you could do it so easily! I'd warn you when I came, and then you might let me in unobserved, as soon as she was alone, and watch till I departed—your conscience quite calm, you would be hindering mischief”

I protested against playing that treacherous part in my employer's house, and besides, I urged the cruelty, and selfishness of his destroying Mrs Linton's tranquillity for his satisfaction

“The commonest occurrence startles her painfully,” I said “She's all nerves, and she couldn't bear the surprise, I'm positive—Don't persist, sir! or else, I shall be obliged to inform my master of your designs, and he'll take measures to secure his house and its inmates from any such unwarrantable intrusions!”

“In that case, I'll take measures to secure you, woman!” exclaimed Heathcliff, “you shall not leave Wuthering Heights till to-morrow morning It is a foolish story to assert that Catherine could not bear to see me, and as to surprising her, I don't desire it, you must prepare her—ask her if I may come You say she never mentions my name, and that I am never mentioned to her To whom should she mention me if I am a forbidden topic in the house? She thinks you are all spies for her husband—Oh, I've no doubt she's in hell among you! I guess, by her silence as much as anything, what she feels You say she is often restless, and anxious-looking—is that a proof of tranquillity? You talk of her mind being unsettled—How the devil could it be otherwise, in her frightful isolation? And that insipid, paltry creature attending her from duty and humanity! From pity and charity He might as well plant an oak in a flower-pot, and expect it to thrive, as imagine he can restore her to vigour in the soil of his shallow cares! Let us settle it at once, will you stay here, and am I to fight my way to Catherine over Linton, and his footmen? Or will you be my friend, as you have been hitherto, and do what I request? Decide! because there is no reason for my lingering another minute, if you persist in your stubborn ill-nature!”

Well, Mr Lockwood, I argued, and complained, and flatly refused him fifty times, but in the long run he forced me to an agreement—I engaged to carry a letter from him to my mistress, and, should she consent, I promised to let him have intelligence of Linton's next absence from home, when he might come, and get in as he was able—I wouldn't be there, and my fellow servants should be equally out of the way

Was it right, or wrong? I fear it was wrong, though expedient I thought I prevented another explosion by my compliance, and I thought too, it might create a favourable crisis in Catherine's mental illness and then I remembered Mr Edgar's stern rebuke of my carrying tales, and I tried to smooth away all disquietude on the subject, by affirming, with frequent iteration, that, that betrayal of trust, if it merited so harsh an appellation, should be the last

Notwithstanding, my journey homeward was sadder than my journey thither, and many misgivings I had, ere I could prevail on myself to put the missive in Mrs Linton's hand

But here is Kenneth—I'll go down, and tell him how much better you are My history is dree, as we say, and will serve to wile away another morning

Dree, and dreary! I reflected as the good woman descended to receive the doctor, and not exactly of the kind which I should have chosen to amuse me, but never mind! I'll extract wholesome medicines from Mrs Dean's bitter herbs, and firstly, let me beware of the fascination that lurks in Catherine Heathcliff's brilliant eyes I should be in a curious taking if I surrendered my heart to that young person, and the daughter turned out a second edition of the mother!

---

CHAPTER XV

---

ANOTHER WEEK OVER—and I am so many days nearer health, and spring! I have now heard all my neighbour's history, at different sittings, as the housekeeper could spare time from more important occupations I'll continue it in her own words, only a little condensed She is, on the whole, a very fair narrator and I don't think I could improve her style

In the evening, she said, the evening of my visit to the Heights, I knew as well as if I saw him, that Mr Heathcliff was about the place, and I shunned going out, because I still carried his letter in my pocket, and didn't want to be threatened, or teased any more

I had made up my mind not to give it till my master went somewhere, as I could not guess how its receipt would affect Catherine The consequence was, that it did not reach her before the lapse of three days. The fourth was Sunday, and I brought it into her room, after the family were gone to church.

There was a man servant left to keep the house with me, and we generally made a practice of locking the doors during the hours of service, but on that occasion, the weather was so warm and pleasant that I set them wide open, and to fulfil my engagement, as I knew who would be coming I told my companion that the mistress wished very much for some oranges, and he must run over to the village, and get a few to be paid for on the morrow. He departed, and I went up-stairs.

Mrs Linton sat in a loose, white dress with a light shawl over her shoulders, in the recess of the open window, as usual. Her thick, long hair had been partly removed at the beginning of her illness, and now, she wore it simply combed in its natural tresses over her temples and neck. Her appearance was altered, as I had told Heathcliff, but when she was calm, there seemed unearthly beauty in the change.

The flash of her eyes had been succeeded by a dreamy and melancholy softness: they no longer gave the impression of looking at the objects around her, they appeared always to gaze beyond, and far beyond—you would have said out of this world—Then, the paleness of her face, its haggard aspect having vanished as she recovered flesh, and the peculiar expression arising from her mental state, though painfully suggestive of their causes, added to the touching interest, which she awakened, and invariably to me, I know, and to any person who saw her, I should think, refuted more tangible proofs of convalescence and stamped her as one doomed to decay.

A book lay spread on the sill before her, and the scarcely perceptible wind fluttered its leaves at intervals. I believe Linton had laid it there, for she never endeavoured to divert herself with reading, or occupation of any kind, and he would spend many an hour in trying to entice her attention to some subject which had formerly been her amusement.

She was conscious of his aim, and in her better moods, endured his efforts placidly, only showing their uselessness by now and then suppressing a wearied sigh, and restraining him at last with the saddest of smiles and kisses. At other times, she would turn petulantly away, and hide her face in her hands, or even push him off angrily, and then he took care to let her alone, for he was certain of doing no good.

Gimmerton chapel bells were still ringing, and the full, mellow flow of the beck in the valley came soothingly on the ear. It was a sweet substitute for the yet absent murmur of the summer foliage which drowned that music about the Grange when the trees were in leaf. At Wuthering Heights it always sounded on quiet days, following a great thaw, or a season of steady rain—and, of Wuthering Heights, Catherine was thinking as she listened, that is, if she thought, or listened, at all, but she had the vague, distant look I mentioned before, which expressed no recognition of material things either by ear or eye.

"There's a letter for you, Mrs Linton," I said, gently inserting it in one hand that rested on her knee. "You must read it immediately, because it wants an answer. Shall I break the seal?"

"Yes," she answered, without altering the direction of her eyes.

I opened it—it was very short.

"Now," I continued, "read it."

She drew away her hand, and let it fall. I replaced it in her lap, and stood waiting till it should please her to glance down, but that movement was so long delayed that at last I resumed—

"Must I read it, ma'am? It is from Mr Heathcliff."

There was a start, and a troubled gleam of recollection, and a struggle to arrange her ideas. She lifted the letter, and seemed to peruse it, and when she came to the signature she sighed, yet still I found she had not gathered its import, for upon my desiring to hear her reply she merely pointed to the name, and gazed at me with mournful and questioning eagerness.

"Well, he wishes to see you," said I, guessing her need of an interpreter. "He's in the garden by this time, and impatient to know what answer I shall bring."

As I spoke, I observed a large dog lying on the sunny grass beneath, raise its ears, as if about to bark, and then smoothing them back, announce by a wag of the tail that someone approached whom it did not consider a stranger.

Mrs Linton bent forward, and listened breathlessly. The minute after a step traversed the hall, the open house was too tempting for Heathcliff to resist walking in: most likely he supposed that I was inclined to shirk my promise, and so resolved to trust to his own audacity.

With straining eagerness Catherine gazed towards the entrance of her chamber. He did not hit the right room directly, she motioned me to admit him, but he found it out, ere I could reach the door, and in a stride or two was at her side, and had her grasped in his arms

He neither spoke, nor loosed his hold, for some five minutes, during which period he bestowed more kisses than ever he gave in his life before, I dare say, but then my mistress had kissed him first, and I plainly saw that he could hardly bear, for downright agony, to look into her face! The same conviction had stricken him as me, from the instant he beheld her, that there was no prospect of ultimate recovery there—she was fated, sure to die

“Oh, Cathy! Oh my life! how can I bear it?” was the first sentence he uttered, in a tone that did not seek to disguise his despair

And now he stared at her so earnestly that I thought the very intensity of his gaze would bring tears into his eyes, but they burned with anguish, they did not melt

“What now?” said Catherine, leaning back, and returning his look with a suddenly clouded brow—her humour was a mere vane for constantly varying caprices “You and Edgar have broken my heart, Heathcliff! And you both come to bewail the deed to me, as if you were the people to be pitied! I shall not pity you, not I You have killed me—and thriven on it, I think How strong you are! How many years do you mean to live after I am gone?”

Heathcliff had knelt on one knee to embrace her, he attempted to rise, but she seized his hair, and kept him down

“I wish I could hold you,” she continued bitterly, “till we were both dead! I shouldn’t care what you suffered I care nothing for your sufferings Why shouldn’t you suffer? I do! Will you forget me—will you be happy when I am in the earth? Will you say twenty years hence, ‘That’s the grave of Catherine Earnshaw I loved her long ago, and was wretched to lose her, but it is past I’ve loved many others since—my children are dearer to me than she was, and, at death, I shall not rejoice that I am going to her, I shall be sorry that I must lose them!’ Will you say so, Heathcliff?”

“Don’t torture me till I am as mad as yourself,” cried he, wrenching his head free, and grinding his teeth

The two, to a cool spectator, made a strange and fearful picture Well might Catherine deem that heaven would be a land of exile to her, unless, with her mortal body, she cast away her mortal character also Her present countenance had a wild vindictiveness in its white cheek, and a bloodless lip, and scintillating eye, and she retained, in her closed fingers, a portion of the locks she had been grasping. As to her companion, while raising himself with one hand, he had taken her arm with the other, and so inadequate was his stock of gentleness to the requirements of her condition, that on his letting go, I saw four distinct impressions left blue in the colourless skin.

"Are you possessed with a devil," he pursued, savagely, "to talk in that manner to me, when you are dying? Do you reflect that all those words will be branded in my memory, and eating deeper eternally, after you have left me? You know you lie to say I have killed you, and, Catherine, you know that I could as soon forget you, as my existence! Is it not sufficient for your infernal selfishness, that while you are at peace I shall writhe in the torments of hell?"

"I shall not be at peace," moaned Catherine, recalled to a sense of physical weakness by the violent, unequal throbbing of her heart, which beat visibly, and audibly under this excess of agitation.

She said nothing further till the paroxysm was over, then she continued, more kindly—

"I'm not wishing you greater torment than I have, Heathcliff! I only wish us never to be parted—and should a word of mine distress you hereafter, think I feel the same distress underground, and for my own sake, forgive me! Come here and kneel down again! You never harmed me in your life. Nay, if you nurse anger, that will be worse to remember than my harsh words! Won't you come here again? Do!"

Heathcliff went to the back of her chair, and leant over, but not so far as to let her see his face, which was livid with emotion. She bent round to look at him, he would not permit it, turning abruptly, he walked to the fire-place, where he stood, silent, with his back towards us.

Mrs Linton's glance followed him suspiciously every movement woke a new sentiment in her. After a pause, and a prolonged gaze, she resumed, addressing me in accents of indignant disappointment.

"Oh, you see, Nelly! he would not relent a moment, to keep me out of the grave! That is how I'm loved! Well, never mind! That is not my Heathcliff. I shall love mine yet, and take him with me—he's in my soul. And," added she, musingly, "the thing that irks me most is this shattered prison, after all I'm tired, tired of being enclosed here I'm wearying to escape into that glorious world, and to be always there, not seeing it dimly through tears, and yearning for it through the walls of an aching heart, but really with it, and in it. Nelly, you think you are better and more fortunate than I, in full health and strength—you are sorry for me—very soon that will be altered I shall be sorry for you I shall be incomparably beyond and above you all I wonder he won't be near me!" She went on to herself "I thought he wished it Heathcliff dear! you should not be sullen now Do come to me, Heathcliff "

In her eagerness she rose, and supported herself on the arm of the chair At that earnest appeal, he turned to her, looking absolutely desperate His eyes wide, and wet, at last, flashed fiercely on her, his breast heaved convulsively An instant they held asunder, and then how they met I hardly saw, but Catherine made a spring, and he caught her, and they were locked in an embrace from which I thought my mistress would never be released alive In fact, to my eyes, she seemed directly insensible He flung himself into the nearest seat, and on my approaching hurriedly to ascertain if she had fainted, he gnashed at me, and foamed like a mad dog, and gathered her to him with greedy jealousy I did not feel as if I were in the company of a creature of my own species, it appeared that he would not understand, though I spoke to him, so, I stood off and held my tongue in great perplexity

A movement of Catherine's relieved me a little presently she put up her hand to clasp his neck, and bring her cheek to his, as he held her while he, in return, covering her with frantic caresses, said wildly—

"You teach me now how cruel you've been—cruel and false Why did you despise me? Why did you betray your own heart, Cathy? I have not one word of comfort—you deserve this You have killed yourself Yes, you may kiss me, and cry, and wring out my kisses and tears They'll blight you—they'll damn you You loved me—then what right had you to leave me? What right—answer me—for the poor fancy you felt for Linton? Because misery, and degradation, and death, and nothing that God or satan could inflict would have parted us, you, of your own will, did it I have not broken your heart—you have broken it—and in breaking it, you have broken mine So much the worse for me, that I am strong Do I want to live? What kind of living will it be when you—oh God! would you like to live with your soul in the grave?”

“Let me alone Let me alone,” sobbed Catherine “If I have done wrong, I’m dying for it It is enough! You left me too, but I won’t upbraid you! I forgive you Forgive me!”

“It is hard to forgive, and to look at those eyes, and feel those wasted hands,” he answered “Kiss me again, and don’t let me see your eyes! I forgive what you have done to me I love my murderer—but yours! How can I?”

They were silent—their faces hid against each other, and washed by each other’s tears At least, I suppose the weeping was on both sides, as it seemed Heathcliff could weep on a great occasion like this

I grew very uncomfortable, meanwhile, for the afternoon wore fast away, the man whom I had sent off returned from his errand, and I could distinguish, by the shine of the westering sun up the valley, a concourse thickening outside Gimmerton chapel porch

“Service is over,” I announced “My master will be here in half-an-hour”

Heathcliff groaned a curse, and strained Catherine closer—she never moved

Ere long I perceived a group of the servants passing up the road towards the kitchen wing Mr Linton was not far behind, he opened the gate himself, and sauntered slowly up, probably enjoying the lovely afternoon that breathed as soft as summer

“Now he is here,” I exclaimed “For Heaven’s sake, hurry down! You’ll not meet any one on the front stairs Do be quick, and stay among the trees till he is fairly in”

“I must go, Cathy,” said Heathcliff, seeking to extricate himself from his companion’s arms “But, if I live, I’ll see you again before you are asleep I won’t stray five yards from your window”

“You must not go!” she answered, holding him as firmly as her strength allowed “You shall not, I tell you”

“For one hour,” he pleaded earnestly

“Not for one minute,” she replied

“I must—Linton will be up immediately,” persisted the alarmed intruder

He would have risen, and unfixed her fingers by the act—she clung fast gasping, there was mad resolution in her face

"No!" she shrieked "Oh, don't, don't go It is the last time! Edgar will not hurt us Heathcliff, I shall die! I shall die!"

"Damn the fool! There he is," cried Heathcliff, sinking back into his seat "Hush, my darling! Hush, hush, Catherine! I'll stay If he shot me so, I'd expire with a blessing on my lips"

And there they were fast again I heard my master mounting the stairs—the cold sweat ran from my forehead, I was horrified

"Are you going to listen to her ravings?" I said, passionately "She does not know what she says Will you ruin her, because she has not wit to help herself? Get up! You could be free instantly That is the most diabolical deed that ever you did We are all done for—master, mistress, and servant"

I wrung my hands, and cried out, and Mr Linton hastened his step at the noise In the midst of my agitation, I was sincerely glad to observe that Catherine's arms had fallen relaxed, and her head hung down

"She's fainted or dead," I thought, "so much the better Far better that she should be dead, than lingering a burden, and a misery-maker to all about her"

Edgar sprang to his unbidden guest, blanched with astonishment and rage What he meant to do, I cannot tell, however, the other stopped all demonstrations, at once, by placing the lifeless-looking form in his arms

"Look there!" he said, "unless you be a fiend, help her first—then you shall speak to me!"

He walked into the parlour, and sat down, Mr Linton summoned me, and with great difficulty, and after resorting to many means, we managed to restore her to sensation, but she was all bewildered, she sighed, and moaned, and knew nobody Edgar, in his anxiety for her, forgot her hated friend I did not I went, at the earliest opportunity, and besought him to depart, affirming that Catherine was better, and he should hear from me in the morning, how she passed the night

"I shall not refuse to go out of doors," he answered, "but I shall stay in the garden, and, Nelly, mind you keep your word to-morrow I shall be under those larch trees, mind! or I pay another visit, whether Linton be in or not"

He sent a rapid glance through the half-open door of the chamber, and ascertaining that what I stated was apparently true, delivered the house of his luckless presence

---

CHAPTER XVI

---

ABOUT TWELVE O'CLOCK that night, was born the Catherine you saw at Wuthering Heights, a puny, seven months' child, and two hours after the mother died, having never recovered sufficient consciousness to miss Heathcliff or know Edgar

The latter's distraction at his bereavement is a subject too painful to be dwelt on, its after effects showed how deep the sorrow sunk

A great addition, in my eyes, was his being left without an heir I bemoaned that, as I gazed on the feeble orphan, and I mentally abused old Linton for, what was only natural partiality, the securing his estate to his own daughter, instead of his son's

An unwelcomed infant it was, poor thing! It might have wailed out of life, and nobody cared a morsel, during those first hours of existence We redeemed the neglect afterwards, but its beginning was as friendless as its end is likely to be

Next morning—bright and cheerful out of doors—stole softened in through the blinds of the silent room, and suffused the couch and its occupant with a mellow, tender glow

Edgar Linton had his head laid on the pillow, and his eyes shut His young and fair features were almost as deathlike as those of the form beside him, and almost as fixed, but his was the hush of exhausted anguish, and hers of perfect peace Her brow smooth, her lids closed, her lips wearing the expression of a smile No angel in heaven could be more beautiful than she appeared, and I partook of the infinite calm in which she lay My mind was never in a holier frame, than while I gazed on that untroubled image of Divine rest I instinctively echoed the words she had uttered, a few hours before "Incomparably beyond, and above us all! Whether still on earth or now in heaven her spirit is at home with God!"

I don't know if it be a peculiarity in me, but I am seldom otherwise than happy while watching in the chamber of death, should no frenzied or despairing mourner share the duty with me. I see a repose that neither earth nor hell can break, and I feel an assurance of the endless and shadowless hereafter—the Eternity they have entered—where life is boundless in its duration, and love in its sympathy, and joy in its fulness. I noticed on that occasion how much selfishness there is even in a love like Mr Linton's, when he so regretted Catherine's blessed release!

To be sure one might have doubted, after the wayward and impatient existence she had led, whether she merited a haven of peace at last. One might doubt in seasons of cold reflection, but not then, in the presence of her corpse. It asserted its own tranquillity, which seemed a pledge of equal quiet to its former inhabitant.

"Do you believe such people are happy in the other world, sir? I'd give a great deal to know."

I declined answering Mrs Dean's question, which struck me as something heterodox. She proceeded:

"Retracing the course of Catherine Linton, I fear we have no right to think she is—but we'll leave her with her Maker."

The master looked asleep, and I ventured soon after sunrise to quit the room and steal out to the pure, refreshing air. The servants thought me gone to shake off the drowsiness of my protracted watch, in reality my chief motive was seeing Mr Heathcliff. If he had remained among the larches all night he would have heard nothing of the stir at the Grange, unless, perhaps, he might catch the gallop of the messenger going to Gimmerton. If he had come nearer, he would probably be aware, from the lights flitting to and fro, and the opening and shutting of the outer doors, that all was not right within.

I wished yet feared to find him. I felt the terrible news must be told, and I longed to get it over, but how to do it I did not know.

He was there—at least a few yards further in the park, leant against an old ash tree, his hat off, and his hair soaked with the dew that had gathered on the budded branches, and fell pattering round him. He had been standing a long time in that position, for I saw a pair of ousels passing and repassing, scarcely three feet from him, busy in building their nest, and regarding his proximity no more than that of a piece of timber They flew off at my approach, and he raised his eyes and spoke

"She's dead!" he said, "I've not waited for you to learn that Put your handkerchief away—don't snivel before me Damn you all! she wants none of your tears!"

I was weeping as much for him as her we do sometimes pity creatures that have none of the feeling either for themselves or others, and when I first looked into his face I perceived that he had got intelligence of the catastrophe, and a foolish notion struck me that his heart was quelled, and he prayed, because his lips moved, and his gaze was bent on the ground

"Yes, she's dead!" I answered, checking my sobs, and drying my cheeks "Gone to heaven, I hope, where we may, every one, join her, if we take due warning, and leave our evil ways to follow good!"

"Did she take due warning, then?" asked Heathcliff, attempting a sneer "Did she die like a saint? Come, give me a true history of the event How did—"

He endeavored to pronounce the name, but could not manage it, and compressing his mouth, he held a silent combat with his inward agony, defying, meanwhile, my sympathy with an unflinching, ferocious stare

"How did she die?" he resumed, at last—fain, notwithstanding his hardihood, to have a support behind him, for, after the struggle, he trembled, in spite of himself, to his very finger-ends

"Poor wretch!" I thought, "you have a heart and nerves the same as your brother men! Why should you be anxious to conceal them? your pride cannot blind God! You tempt him to wring them, till he forces a cry of humiliation!"

"Quietly as a lamb!" I answered, aloud "She drew a sigh, and stretched herself, like a child reviving, and sinking again to sleep, and five minutes after I felt one little pulse at her heart, and nothing more!"

"And—did she ever mention me?" he asked, hesitating, as if he dreaded the answer to his question would introduce details that he could not bear to hear

"Her senses never returned—she recognized nobody from the time you left her," I said "She lies with a sweet smile on her face, and her latest ideas wandered back to pleasant early days Her life closed in a gentle dream—may she wake as kindly in the other world!"

"May she wake in torment!" he cried, with frightful vehemence, stamping his foot, and groaning in a sudden paroxysm of ungovernable passion "Why, she's a liar to the end! Where is she? Not there—not in heaven—not perished—where? Oh! you said you cared nothing for my sufferings! And I pray one prayer—I repeat it till my tongue stiffens—Catherine Earnshaw, may you not rest, as long as I am living! You said I killed you—haunt me then! The murdered do haunt their murderers I believe—I know that ghosts have wandered on earth Be with me always—take any form—drive me mad! only do not leave me in this abyss, where I cannot find you! Oh, God! it is unutterable! I cannot live without my life! I cannot live without my soul!"

He dashed his head against the knotted trunk, and, lifting up his eyes, howled, not like a man, but like a savage beast being goaded to death with knives and spears

I observed several splashes of blood about the bark of the tree, and his hand and forehead were both stained, probably the scene I witnessed was a repetition of others acted during the night It hardly moved my compassion—it appalled me, still I felt reluctant to quit him so But the moment he recollected himself enough to notice me watching, he thundered a command for me to go, and I obeyed He was beyond my skill to quiet or console!

Mrs Linton's funeral was appointed to take place on the Friday following her decease, and till then her coffin remained uncovered, and strewn with flowers and scented leaves, in the great drawing-room Linton spent his days and nights there, a sleepless guardian, and—a circumstance concealed from all but me—Heathcliff spent his nights, at least, outside, equally a stranger to repose

I held no communication with him, still I was conscious of his design to enter, if he could, and on the Tuesday, a little after dark, when my master from sheer fatigue, had been compelled to retire a couple of hours, I went and opened one of the windows, moved by his perseverance to give him a chance of bestowing on the fading image of his idol one final adieu

He did not omit to avail himself of the opportunity, cautiously and briefly, too cautiously to betray his presence by the slightest noise, indeed, I shouldn't have discovered that he had been there, except for the disarrangement of the drapery about the corpse's face, and for observing on the floor a curl of light hair, fastened with a silver thread, which, on examination, I ascertained to have been taken from a locket hung round Catherine's neck. Heath-cliff had opened the trinket, and cast out its contents, replacing them by a black lock of his own. I twisted the two, and enclosed them together.

Mr Earnshaw was, of course, invited to attend the remains of his sister to the grave, and he sent no excuse, but he never came, so that besides her husband, the mourners were wholly composed of tenants and servants. Isabella was not asked.

The place of Catherine's interment, to the surprise of the villagers, was neither in the chapel, under the carved monument of the Lintons, nor yet by the tombs of her own relations, outside. It was dug on a green slope, in a corner of the kirkyard, where the wall is so low that heath and bilberry plants have climbed over it from the moor, and peat mould almost buries it. Her husband lies in the same spot, now, and they have each a simple headstone, above, and a plain grey block at their feet, to mark the graves.

---

CHAPTER XVII

---

THAT FRIDAY made the last of our fine days, for a month. In the evening, the weather broke, the wind shifted from south to north-east, and brought rain, first, and then sleet, and snow.

On the morrow one could hardly imagine that there had been three weeks of summer: the primroses and crocuses were hidden under wintry drifts; the larks were silent, the young leaves of the early trees smitten and blackened—And dreary, and chill, and dismal that morrow did creep over! My master kept his room—I took possession of the lonely parlour, converting it into a nursery, and there I was sitting, with the moaning doll of a child laid on my knee, rocking it to and fro, and watching, meanwhile, the still driving flakes build up the uncurtained window, when the door opened, and some person entered out of breath, and laughing!

My anger was greater than my astonishment for a minute, I supposed it one of the maids, and I cried,

"Have done! How dare you show your giddiness, here? What would Mr Linton say if he heard you?"

"Excuse me!" answered a familiar voice, "but I know Edgar is in bed, and I cannot stop myself."

With that, the speaker came forward to the fire, panting and holding her hand, to her side.

"I have run the whole way from Wuthering Heights!" she continued, after a pause. "Except where I've flown—I couldn't count the number of falls I've had—Oh, I'm aching all over! Don't be alarmed—There shall be an explanation as soon as I can give it—only just have the goodness to step out, and order the carriage to take me on to Gimmerton, and tell a servant to seek up a few clothes in my wardrobe."

The intruder was Mis Heathcliff—she certainly seemed in no laughing predicament: her hair streamed on her shoulders dripping with snow and water, she was dressed in the girlish dress she commonly wore, befitting her age more than her position, a low frock, with short sleeves, and nothing on either head, or neck. The frock was of light silk, and clung to her with wet, and her feet were protected merely by thin slippers, add to this a deep cut under one ear, which only the cold prevented from bleeding profusely, a white face scratched and bruised, and a frame hardly able to support itself through fatigue, and you may fancy my first fright was not much allayed when I had leisure to examine her.

"My dear young lady," I exclaimed, "I'll stir no-where, and hear nothing, till you have removed every article of your clothes, and put on dry things, and certainly you shall not go to Gimmerton to-night, so it is needless to order the carriage."

"Certainly, I shall," she said, "walking or riding—yet I've no objection to dress myself decently, and—ah, see how it flows down my neck now! The fire does make it smart."

She insisted on my fulfilling her directions, before she would let me touch her, and not till after the coachman had been instructed to get ready, and a maid set to pack up some necessary attire, did I obtain her consent for binding the wound, and helping to change her garments.

"Now, Ellen," she said when my task was finished, and she was seated in an easy chair on the hearth, with a cup of tea before her, "You sit down opposite me, and put poor Catherine's baby away—I don't like to see it! You mustn't think I care little for Catherine, because I behaved so foolishly on entering—I've cried too, bitterly—yes, more than any one else has reason to cry—we parted unreconciled, you remember, and I shan't forgive myself. But for all that, I was not going to sympathise with him—the brute beast! O give me the poker! This is the last thing of his I have about me,” she slipped the gold ring from her third finger, and threw it on the floor. “I'll smash it!” she continued striking it with childish spite. “And then I'll burn it!” and she took and dropped the misused article among the coals. “There! he shall buy another, if he gets me back again. He'd be capable of coming to seek me, to tease Edgar—I dare not stay, lest that notion should possess his wicked head! And besides, Edgar has not been kind, has he? And I won't come suing for his assistance, nor will I bring him into more trouble—Necessity compelled me to seek shelter here, though if I had not learnt he was out of the way, I'd have halted at the kitchen, washed my face, warmed myself, got you to bring what I wanted, and departed again to anywhere out of reach of my accursed—of that incarnate goblin! Ah, he was in such a fury—if he had caught me! It's a pity, Earnshaw is not his match in strength—I wouldn't have run, till I'd seen him all but demolished, had Hindley been able to do it!”

“Well, don't talk so fast, Miss!” I interrupted, “you'll disorder the handkerchief I have tied round your face, and make the cut bleed again—Drink your tea, and take breath and give over laughing—Laughter is sadly out of place under this roof, and in your condition!”

“An undeniable truth,” she replied, “Listen to that child! It maintains a constant wail—send it out of my hearing, for an hour, I shan't stay any longer.”

I rang the bell, and committed it to a servant's care, and then I inquired what had urged her to escape from Wuthering Heights in such an unlikely plight—and where she meant to go, as she refused remaining with us?

“I ought, and I wish to remain,” answered she, “to cheer Edgar, and take care of the baby, for two things, and because the Grange is my right home—but I tell you, he wouldn't let me! Do you think he could bear to see me grow fat, and merry, and could bear to think that we were tranquil, and not resolve on poisoning our comfort? Now, I have the satisfaction of being sure that he detests me to the point of its annoying him seriously to have me within ear-shot, or eye-sight—I notice, when I enter his presence, the muscles of his countenance are involuntarily distorted into an expression of hatred, partly arising from his knowledge of the good causes I have to feel that sentiment for him, and partly from original aversion—It is strong enough to make me feel pretty certain that he would not chase me over England, supposing I contrived a clear escape, and therefore I must get quite away I've recovered from my first desire to be killed by him I'd rather he'd kill himself! He has extinguished my love effectually, and so I'm at my ease I can recollect yet how I loved him, and can dimly imagine that I could still be loving him, if—No, no! Even if he had doted on me, the devilish nature would have revealed its existence, somehow Catherine had an awfully perverted taste to esteem him so dearly, knowing him so well—Monster! would that he could be blotted out of creation, and out of my memory!”

“Hush, hush! He's a human being,” I said “Be more charitable, there are worse men than he is yet!”

“He's not a human being,” she retorted, “and he has no claim on my charity—I gave him my heart, and he took and pinched it to death, and flung it back to me—people feel with their hearts, Ellen, and since he has destroyed mine, I have not power to feel for him, and I would not, though he groaned from this, to his dying day, and wept tears of blood for Catherine! No, indeed, indeed, I wouldn't!” And here Isabella began to cry, but, immediately dashing the water from her lashes, she recommenced

“You asked, what has driven me to flight at last? I was compelled to attempt it, because I had succeeded in rousing his rage a pitch above his malignity Pulling out the nerves with red hot pincers, requires more coolness than knocking on the head He was worked up to forget the fiendish prudence he boasted of, and proceeding to murderous violence I experienced pleasure in being able to exasperate him the sense of pleasure woke my instinct of self-preservation, so, I fairly broke free, and if ever I come into his hands again he is welcome to a signal revenge

“Yesterday, you know, Mr Earnshaw should have been at the funeral He kept himself sober, for the purpose—tolerably sober, not going to-bed mad, at six o'clock and getting up drunk, at twelve Consequently, he rose, in suicidal low spirits, as fit for the church, as for a dance, and instead, he sat down by the fire, and swallowed gin or brandy by tumblerfuls

“Heathcliff—I shudder to name him! has been a stranger in the house from last Sunday till to-day—Whether the angels have fed him, or his kin beneath, I cannot tell, but, he has not eaten a meal with us for nearly a week—He has just come home at dawn, and gone upstairs to his chamber, locking himself in—as if anybody dreamt of coveting his company! There he has continued, praying like a Methodist, only the deity he implored is senseless dust and ashes, and God, when addressed, was curiously confounded with his own black father! After concluding these precious orisons—and they lasted generally till he grew hoarse, and his voice was strangled in his throat, he would be off again, always straight down to the Grange! I wonder Edgar did not send for a constable, and give him into custody! For me, grieved as I was about Catherine, it was impossible to avoid regarding this season of deliverance from degrading oppression as a holiday

“I recovered spirits sufficient to hear Joseph’s eternal lectures without weeping, and to move up and down the house, less with the foot of a frightened thief, than formerly You wouldn’t think that I should cry at anything Joseph could say, but he and Hareton are detestable companions I’d rather sit with Hindley, and hear his awful talk, than with ‘t’ little maister,’ and his staunch supporter, that odious old man!

“When Heathcliff is in, I’m often obliged to seek the kitchen, and their society, or starve among the damp, uninhabited chambers, when he is not, as was the case this week, I establish a table, and chair, at one corner of the house fire, and never mind how Mr Earnshaw may occupy himself, and he does not interfere with my arrangements he is quieter, now, than he used to be, if no one provokes him, more sullen and depressed, and less furious Joseph affirms he’s sure he’s an altered man, that the Lord has touched his heart, and he is saved ‘so as by fire’ I’m puzzled to detect signs of the favorable change, but it is not my business

“Yester-evening, I sat in my nook reading some old books, till late on towards twelve It seemed so dismal to go up-stairs, with the wild snow blowing outside, and my thoughts continually reverting to the kirkyard, and the new made grave! I dared hardly lift my eyes from the page before me, that melancholy scene so instantly usurped its place

“Hindley sat opposite, his head leant on his hand, perhaps meditating on the same subject He had ceased drinking at a point below irrationality, and had neither stirred, nor spoken during two or three hours There was no sound through the house, but the moaning wind which shook the windows every now and then the faint crackling of the coals, and the click of my snuffers as I removed at intervals the long wick of the candle. Hareton and Joseph were probably fast asleep in bed. It was very, very sad, and while I read, I sighed, for it seemed as if all joy had vanished from the world, never to be restored.

"The doleful silence was broken, at length, by the sound of the kitchen latch—Heathcliff had returned from his watch earlier than usual, owing, I suppose, to the sudden storm.

"That entrance was fastened, and we heard him coming round to get in by the other. I rose with an irrepressible expression of what I felt on my lips, which induced my companion, who had been staring towards the door, to turn and look at me.

"'I'll keep him out five minutes,' he exclaimed. 'You won't object?'

"'No, you may keep him out the whole night, for me,' I answered. 'Do! put the key in the lock, and draw the bolts.'

"Earnshaw accomplished this, ere his guest reached the front, he then came, and brought his chair to the other side of my table, leaning over it, and searching in my eyes a sympathy with the burning hate that gleamed from his as he both looked, and felt like an assassin, he couldn't exactly find that, but he discovered enough to encourage him to speak.

"'You, and I,' he said, 'have each a great debt to settle with the man out yonder! If we were neither of us cowards, we might combine to discharge it. Are you as soft as your brother? Are you willing to endure to the last, and not once attempt a repayment?'

"'I'm weary of enduring now,' I replied, 'and I'd be glad of a retaliation that wouldn't recoil on myself, but treachery, and violence, are spears pointed at both ends—they wound those who resort to them, worse than their enemies.'

"'Treachery and violence are a just return for treachery and violence!' cried Hindley. 'Mrs. Heathcliff, I'll ask you to do nothing, but sit still, and be dumb—Tell me now, can you? I'm sure you would have as much pleasure as I, in witnessing the conclusion of the fiend's existence, he'll be your death unless you overreach him—and he'll be my ruin—Damn the hellish villain! He knocks at the door, as if he were master here, already! Promise to hold your tongue, and before that clock strikes—it wants three minutes of one—you're a free woman!'

"He took the implements which I described to you in my letter from his breast, and would have turned down the candle—I snatched it away, however, and seized his arm

"'I'll not hold my tongue!' I said, 'You mustn't touch him Let the door remain shut and be quiet!'

"'No! I've formed my resolution, and by God, I'll execute it!' cried the desperate being, 'I'll do you a kindness, in spite of yourself, and Hareton justice! And you needn't trouble your head to screen me, Catherine is gone—Nobody alive would regret me, or be ashamed though I cut my throat, this minute—and it's time to make an end!'

"I might as well have struggled with a bear, or reasoned with a lunatic The only resource left me was to run to a lattice, and warn his intended victim of the fate which awaited him

"'You'd better seek shelter somewhere else to-night!' I exclaimed in a rather triumphant tone 'Mr Earnshaw has a mind to shoot you, if you persist in endeavouring to enter'

"'You'd better open the door, you—' he answered, addressing me by some elegant term that I don't care to repeat

"'I shall not meddle in the matter,' I retorted again 'Come in, and get shot, if you please! I've done my duty'

"With that I shut the window, and returned to my place by the fire, having too small a stock of hypocrisy at my command to pretend any anxiety for the danger that menaced him

"Earnshaw swore passionately at me, affirming that I loved the villain yet and calling me all sorts of names for the base spirit I evinced And I, in my secret heart, (and conscience never reproached me) thought what a blessing it would be for him, should Heathcliff put him out of misery and what a blessing for me, should he send Heathcliff to his right abode! As I sat nursing these reflections, the casement behind me was banged on to the floor by a blow from the latter individual, and his black countenance looked blighting through The stanchions stood too close to suffer his shoulders to follow, and I smiled, exulting in my fancied security His hair and clothes were whitened with snow, and his sharp cannibal teeth, revealed by cold and wrath, gleamed through the dark

"'Isabella, let me in, or I'll make you repent!' he 'gurned,' as Joseph calls it

"'I cannot commit murder,' I replied 'Mr Hindley stands sentinel with a knife, and loaded pistol'

"'Let me in by the kitchen door!' he said

"'Hindley will be there before me,' I answered 'And that's a poor love of yours, that cannot bear a shower of snow' We were left at peace in our beds as long as the summer moon shone, but the moment a blast of winter returns, you must run for shelter! Heathcliff, if I were you, I'd go stretch myself over her grave, and die like a faithful dog The world is surely not worth living in now, is it? You had distinctly impressed on me, the idea that Catherine was the whole joy of your life—I can't imagine how you think of surviving her loss'

"'He's there is he?' exclaimed my companion, rushing to the gap 'If I can get my arm out I can hit him!'

"I'm afraid, Ellen, you'll set me down, as really wicked—but you don't know all, so don't judge! I wouldn't have aided or abetted an attempt on even his life, for anything—Wish that he were dead, I must, and therefore, I was fearfully disappointed, and unnerved by terror for the consequences of my taunting speech when he flung himself on Earnshaw's weapon and wrenched it from his grasp

"The charge exploded, and the knife, in springing back, closed into its owner's wrist Heathcliff pulled it away by main force, slitting up the flesh as it passed on, and thrust it dripping into his pocket He then took a stone, struck down the division between two windows and sprung in His adversary had fallen senseless with excessive pain, and the flow of blood that gushed from an artery, or a large vein

"The ruffian kicked and trampled on him, and dashed his head repeatedly against the flags, holding me with one hand, meantime, to prevent me summoning Joseph

"He exerted preter-human self-denial in abstaining from finishing him, completely, but getting out of breath, he finally desisted, and dragged the apparently inanimate body onto the settle

"There he tore off the sleeve of Earnshaw's coat, and bound up the wound with brutal roughness, spitting and cursing, during the operation, as energetically as he had kicked before

"Being at liberty, I lost no time in seeking the old servant, who, having gathered by degrees the purport of my hasty tale, hurried below, gasping, as he descended the steps two at once

"'Whet is thur tuh do, nah? whet is thur tuh do, nah?'

"'There's this to do,' thundered Heathcliff, 'that your master's mad, and should he last another month, I'll have him to an asylum

And how the devil did you come to fasten me out, you toothless hound? Don't stand muttering and mumbling there. Come, I'm not going to nurse him. Wash that stuff away, and mind the sparks of your candle—it is more than half brandy!"

"'And soa, vah been murthering on him?'" exclaimed Joseph, lifting his hands and eyes in horror. "If iver Aw seed a seeght loike this! May the Lord—"

"Heathcliff gave him a push onto his knees, in the middle of the blood, and flung a towel to him, but instead of proceeding to dry it up, he joined his hands, and began a prayer which excited my laughter from its odd phraseology. I was in the condition of mind to be shocked at nothing, in fact, I was as reckless as some malefactors show themselves at the foot of the gallows."

"'Oh, I forgot you,' said the tyrant, 'you shall do that. Down with you. And you conspire with him against me, do you, viper? There, that is work fit for you!'"

"He shook me till my teeth rattled, and pitched me beside Joseph, who steadily concluded his supplications, and then rose, vowing he would set off for the Grange directly. Mr Linton was a magistrate, and though he had fifty wives dead, he should inquire into this."

"He was so obstinate in his resolution that Heathcliff deemed it expedient to compel, from my lips, a recapitulation of what had taken place, standing over me, heaving with malevolence, as I reluctantly delivered the account in answer to his questions."

"It required a great deal of labour to satisfy the old man that he was not the aggressor, especially with my hardly wrung replies. However, Mr Earnshaw soon convinced him that he was alive still, he hastened to administer a dose of spirits, and by their succour his master presently regained motion and consciousness."

"Heathcliff, aware that he was ignorant of the treatment received while insensible, called him deliriously intoxicated, and said he should not notice his atrocious conduct further, but advised him to get to bed. To my joy, he left us after giving this judicious counsel, and Hindley stretched himself on the hearthstone. I departed to my own room, marvelling that I had escaped so easily."

"This morning, when I came down, about half-an-hour before noon, Mr Earnshaw was sitting by the fire, deadly sick, his evil genius, almost as gaunt and ghastly, leant against the chimney."

Neither appeared inclined to dine, and having waited till all was cold on the table, I commenced alone

"Nothing hindered me from eating heartily, and I experienced a certain sense of satisfaction and superiority, as, at intervals, I cast a look towards my silent companions, and felt the comfort of a quiet conscience within me

"After I had done, I ventured on the unusual liberty of drawing near the fire, going round Earnshaw's seat, and kneeling in the corner beside him

"Heathcliff did not glance my way, and I gazed up, and contemplated his features, almost as confidently as if they had been turned to stone. His forehead, that I once thought so manly, and that I now think so diabolical, was shaded with a heavy cloud, his basilisk eyes were nearly quenched by sleeplessness—and weeping, perhaps, for the lashes were wet then. His lips devoid of their ferocious sneer, and sealed in an expression of unspeakable sadness. Had it been another, I would have covered my face, in the presence of such grief. In his case, I was gratified and ignoble as it seems to insult a fallen enemy, I couldn't miss this chance of sticking in a dart, his weakness was the only time when I could taste the delight of paying wrong for wrong."

"Fie, fie, Miss!" I interrupted. "One might suppose you had never opened a Bible in your life. If God afflict your enemies, surely that ought to suffice you. It is both mean and presumptuous to add your torture to his!"

"In general, I'll allow that it would be, Ellen," she continued. "But what misery laid on Heathcliff could content me, unless I have a hand in it? I'd rather he suffered less, if I might cause his sufferings, and he might know that I was the cause. Oh, I owe him so much. On only one condition can I hope to forgive him. It is, if I may take an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, for every wrench of agony, return a wrench, reduce him to my level. As he was the first to injure, make him the first to implore pardon, and then—why then, Ellen, I might show you some generosity. But it is utterly impossible I can ever be revenged, and therefore I cannot forgive him. Hindley wanted some water, and I handed him a glass, and asked him how he was.

"'Not as ill as I wish,' he replied. 'But leaving out my arm, every inch of me is as sore as if I had been fighting with a legion of imps!'

"'Yes, no wonder,' was my next remark. 'Catherine used to boast that she stood between you and bodily harm—she meant that certain persons would not hurt you, for fear of offending her. It's well people don't really rise from their grave, or, last night, she might have witnessed a repulsive scene! Are not you bruised, and cut over your chest and shoulders?"

"I can't say," he answered, "but what do you mean? Did he dare to strike me when I was down?"

"He trampled on, and kicked you, and dashed you on the ground," I whispered. "And his mouth watered to tear you with his teeth, because, he's only half a man — not so much."

"Mr Earnshaw looked up, like me, to the countenance of our mutual foe, who, absorbed in his anguish, seemed insensible to anything around him, the longer he stood, the plainer his reflections revealed their blackness through his features."

"Oh, if God would but give me strength to strangle him in my last agony, I'd go to hell with joy," groaned the impatient man writhing to rise, and sinking back in despair, convinced of his inadequacy for the struggle.

"Nay, it's enough that he has murdered one of you," I observed aloud. "At the Grange, every one knows your sister would have been living now, had it not been for Mr Heathcliff. After all, it is preferable to be hated, than loved by him. When I recollect how happy we were—how happy Catherine was before he came—I'm fit to curse the day."

"Most likely, Heathcliff noticed more the truth of what was said, than the spirit of the person who said it. His attention was roused, I saw, for his eyes rained down tears among the ashes, and he drew his breath in suffocating sighs."

"I stared full at him, and laughed scornfully. The clouded windows of hell flashed, a moment towards me, the fiend which usually looked out, however, was so dimmed and drowned that I did not fear to hazard another sound of derision."

"Get up, and begone out of my sight," said the mourner.

"I guessed he uttered those words, at least, though his voice was hardly intelligible."

"I beg your pardon," I replied. "But I loved Catherine too, and her brother requires attendance which, for her sake, I shall supply. Now that she's dead, I see her in Hindley, Hindley has exactly her eyes, if you had not tried to gouge them out, and made them black and red, and her——"

"Get up, wretched idiot, before I stamp you to death!" he cried, making a movement that caused me to make one also

"'But then,' I continued, holding myself ready to flee, 'if poor Catherine had trusted you, and assumed the ridiculous, contemptible, degrading title of Mrs Heathcliff, she would soon have presented a similar picture! She wouldn't have borne your abominable behaviour quietly, her detestation and disgust must have found voice'

"The back of the settle, and Earnshaw's person interposed between me and him, so instead of endeavouring to reach me, he snatched a dinner knife from the table, and flung it at my head. It struck beneath my ear, and stopped the sentence I was uttering, but pulling it out, I sprang to the door, and delivered another which I hope went a little deeper than his missile

"The last glimpse I caught of him was a furious rush, on his part, checked by the embrace of his host, and both fell locked together on the hearth

"In my flight through the kitchen I bid Joseph speed to his master, I knocked over Hareton, who was hanging a litter of puppies from a chairback in the doorway, and, blest as a soul escaped from purgatory, I bounded, leaped, and flew down the steep road then, quitting its windings, shot direct across the moor, rolling over banks, and wading through marshes, precipitating myself, in fact, towards the beacon light of the Grange. And far rather would I be condemned to a perpetual dwelling in the infernal regions, than even for one night abide beneath the roof of Wuthering Heights again "

Isabella ceased speaking, and took a drink of tea, then she rose, and bidding me put on her bonnet, and a great shawl I had brought, and turning a deaf ear to my entreaties for her to remain another hour, she stepped onto a chair, kissed Edgar's and Catherine's portraits, bestowed a similar salute on me, and descended to the carriage accompanied by Fanny, who yelped wild with joy at recovering her mistress. She was driven away, never to revisit this neighbourhood, but a regular correspondence was established between her and my master when things were more settled

I believe her new abode was in the south, near London, there she had a son born, a few months subsequent to her escape. He was christened Linton, and, from the first, she reported him to be an ailing, peevish creature

Mr Heathcliff, meeting me one day in the village, inquired

where she lived I refused to tell He remarked that it was not of any moment, only she must beware of coming to her brother she should not be with him, if he had to keep her himself

Though I would give no information, he discovered, through some of the other servants, both her place of residence, and the existence of the child Still he didn't molest her, for which forbearance she might thank his aversion, I suppose

He often asked about the infant, when he saw me, and on hearing its name, smiled grimly, and observed

"They wish me to hate it too, do they?"

"I don't think they wish you to know anything about it," I answered

"But I'll have it," he said, "when I want it They may reckon on that!"

Fortunately, its mother died before the time arrived, some thirteen years after the decease of Catherine, when Linton was twelve, or a little more

On the day succeeding Isabella's unexpected visit, I had no opportunity of speaking to my master he shunned conversation, and was fit for discussing nothing When I could get him to listen, I saw it pleased him that his sister had left her husband, whom he abhorred with an intensity which the mildness of his nature would scarcely seem to allow So deep and sensitive was his aversion, that he refrained from going anywhere where he was likely to see or hear of Heathcliff Grief, and that together, transformed him into a complete hermit he threw up his office of magistrate, ceased even to attend church, avoided the village on all occasions, and spent a life of entire seclusion within the limits of his park and grounds only varied by solitary rambles on the moors, and visits to the grave of his wife, mostly at evening, or early morning, before other wanderers were abroad

But he was too good to be thoroughly unhappy long He didn't pray for Catherine's soul to haunt him Time brought resignation, and a melancholy sweeter than common joy He recalled her memory with ardent, tender love, and hopeful aspiring to the better world, where, he doubted not she was gone

And he had earthly consolation and affections, also For a few days, I said, he seemed regardless of the puny successor to the departed the coldness melted as fast as snow in April, and ere the tiny thing could stammer a word or totter a step, it wielded a despot's sceptre in his heart

It was named Catherine, but he never called it the name in full,

as he had never called the first Catherine short, probably because Heathcliff had a habit of doing so. The little one was always Cathy, it formed to him a distinction from the mother, and yet, a connection with her, and his attachment sprang from its relation to her, far more than from its being his own.

I used to draw a comparison between him, and Hindley Earnshaw and perplex myself to explain satisfactorily, why their conduct was so opposite in similar circumstances. They had both been fond husbands, and were both attached to their children, and I could not see how they shouldn't both have taken the same road, for good or evil. But, I thought in my mind, Hindley with apparently the stronger head, has shown himself sadly the worse and the weaker man. When his ship struck, the captain abandoned his post, and the crew, instead of trying to save her, rushed into riot, and confusion, leaving no hope for their luckless vessel. Linton, on the contrary, displayed the true courage of a loyal and faithful soul: he trusted God, and God comforted him. One hoped, and the other despaired, they chose their own lots, and were righteously doomed to endure them.

But you'll not want to hear my moralizing, Mr Lockwood: you'll judge as well as I can, all these things, at least, you'll think you will and that's the same.

The end of Earnshaw was what might have been expected: it followed fast on his sister's, there was scarcely six months between them. We, at the Grange, never got a very succinct account of his state preceding it, all that I did learn, was on occasion of going to aid in the preparations for the funeral. Mr Kenneth came to announce the event to my master.

"Well, Nelly," said he, riding into the yard, one morning, too early not to alarm me with an instant presentiment of bad news. "It's yours, and my turn to go into mourning at present. Who's given us the slip, now do you think?"

"Who?" I asked in a flurry.

"Why, guess!" he returned, dismounting, and slinging his bridle on a hook by the door. "And nip up the corner of your apron, I'm certain you'll need it."

"Not Mr Heathcliff, surely?" I exclaimed.

"What! would you have tears for him?" said the doctor. "No, Heathcliff's a tough young fellow, he looks blooming to-day—I've just seen him. He's rapidly regaining flesh since he lost his better half."

"Who is it, then, Mr Kenneth?" I repeated impatiently.

"Hindley Earnshaw! Your old friend Hindley—" he replied "And my wicked gossip, though he's been too wild for me this long while There! I said we should draw water—But cheer up! He died true to his character drunk as a lord—Poor lad, I'm sorry too One can't help missing an old companion, though he had the worst tricks with him that ever man imagined, and has done me many a rascally turn—He's barely twenty-seven, it seems, that's your own age, who would have thought you were born in one year?"

I confess this blow was greater to me than the shock of Mrs Linton's death ancient associations lingered round my heart, I sat down in the porch, and wept as for a blood relation, desiring Kenneth to get another servant to introduce him to the master

I could not hinder myself from pondering on the question—"Had he had fair play?" Whatever I did that idea would bother me it was so tiresomely pertinacious that I resolved on requesting leave to go to Wuthering Heights, and assist in the last duties to the dead Mr Linton was extremely reluctant to consent, but I pleaded eloquently for the friendless condition in which he lay, and I said my old master, and foster brother had a claim on my services as strong as his own Besides, I reminded him that the child, Hareton, was his wife's nephew, and, in the absence of nearer kin, he ought to act as its guardian, and he ought to and must inquire how the property was left, and look over the concerns of his brother-in-law

He was unfit for attending to such matters then, but he bid me speak to his lawyer, and at length, permitted me to go His lawyer had been Earnshaw's also I called at the village, and asked him to accompany me He shook his head, and advised that Heathcliff should be let alone, affirming, if the truth were known, Hareton would be found little else than a beggar

"His father died in debt," he said, "the whole property is mortgaged, and the sole chance for the natural heir is to allow him an opportunity of creating some interest in the creditor's heart, that he may be inclined to deal leniently towards him"

When I reached the Heights, I explained that I had come to see everything carried on decently, and Joseph, who appeared in sufficient distress, expressed satisfaction at my presence Mr Heathcliff said he did not perceive that I was wanted, but I might stay and order the arrangements for the funeral, if I chose at the cross-roads, without ceremony of any kind—I happened to leave him ten minutes, yesterday afternoon, and, in that interval, he fastened the two doors of the house against me, and he has spent the night in drinking himself to death deliberately! We broke in this morning, for we heard him snorting like a horse, and there he was, laid over the settle—flaying and scalping would not have wakened him—I sent for Kenneth, and he came, but not till the beast had changed into carrion—he was both dead and cold, and stark, and so you'll allow, it was useless making more stir about him!"

"Correctly," he remarked, "that fool's body should be buried

The old servant confirmed this statement, but muttered,

"Aw'd rayther he'd goan hisseln fur t' doctor! Aw sud uh taen tent uh t' maister better nur him—un he warn't deead when Aw left, nowt uh t' soart!"

I insisted on the funeral being respectable—Mr Heathcliff said I might have my own way there too, only, he desired me to remember, that the money for the whole affair came out of his pocket

He maintained a hard, careless deportment, indicative of neither joy nor sorrow, if anything, it expressed a flinty gratification at a piece of difficult work, successfully executed I observed once, indeed, something like exultation in his aspect. It was just when the people were bearing the coffin from the house, he had the hypocrisy to represent a mourner, and previous to following with Hareton he lifted the unfortunate child on to the table, and muttered with peculiar gusto,

"Now, my bonny lad, you are mine! And we'll see if one tree won't grow as crooked as another, with the same wind to twist it!"

The unsuspecting thing was pleased at this speech, he played with Heathcliff's whiskers, and stroked his cheek, but I divined its meaning and observed tartly,

"That boy must go back with me to Thrushcross Grange, Sir—There is nothing in the world less yours than he is!"

"Does Linton say so?" he demanded

"Of course—he has ordered me to take him," I replied

"Well," said the scoundrel, "we'll not argue the subject now, but I have a fancy to try my hand at rearing a young one, so intimate to your master, that I must supply the place of this with my own, if he attempt to remove it, I don't engage to let Hareton go, undisputed, but, I'll be pretty sure to make the other come! remember to tell him."

This hint was enough to bind our hands I repeated its substance on my return, and Edgar Linton, little interested at the commencement, spoke no more of interfering I'm not aware that he could have done it to any purpose, had he been ever so willing

The guest was now the master of Wuthering Heights he held firm possession, and proved to the attorney, who, in his turn, proved it to Mr Linton, that Earnshaw had mortgaged every yard of land he owned for cash to supply his mania for gaming and he, Heathcliff, was the mortgagee

In that manner, Hareton, who should now be the first gentleman in the neighbourhood, was reduced to a state of complete dependence on his father's inveterate enemy, and lives in his own house as a servant deprived of the advantage of wages, and quite unable to right himself, because of his friendlessness, and his ignorance that he has been wronged

CHAPTER XVIII

THE TWELVE YEARS, continued Mrs Dean, following that dismal period, were the happiest of my life my greatest troubles, in their passage, rose from our little lady's trifling illnesses which she had to experience in common with all children, rich and poor

For the rest, after the first six months, she grew like a larch, and could walk and talk too, in her own way, before the heath blossomed a second time over Mrs Linton's dust

She was the most winning thing that ever brought sunshine into a desolate house—a real beauty in face—with the Earnshaws' handsome dark eyes, but the Lintons' fair skin, and small features, and yellow curling hair Her spirit was high, though not rough, and qualified by a heart, sensitive and lively to excess in its affections That capacity for intense attachments reminded me of her mother, still she did not resemble her, for she could be soft and mild as a dove, and she had a gentle voice, and pensive expression her anger was never furious, her love never fierce, it was deep and tender

However, it must be acknowledged, she had faults to foil her gifts. A propensity to be saucy was one, and a perverse will that indulged children invariably acquire, whether they be good tempered or cross. If a servant chanced to vex her, it was always "I shall tell papa!" And if he reproved her, even by a look, you would have thought it a heart-breaking business. I don't believe he ever did speak a harsh word to her.

He took her education entirely on himself, and made it an amusement. Fortunately, curiosity, and a quick intellect urged her into an apt scholar, she learnt rapidly and eagerly, and did honour to his teaching.

Till she reached the age of thirteen, she had not once been beyond the range of the park by herself. Mr Linton would take her with him, a mile or so outside, on rare occasions, but he trusted her to no one else. Gimmerton was an unsubstantial name in her ears, the chapel, the only building she had approached, or entered, except her own home, Wuthering Heights. And Mr Heathcliff did not exist for her, she was a perfect recluse, and, apparently, perfectly contented. Sometimes, indeed, while surveying the country from her nursery window, she would observe—

"Ellen, how long will it be before I can walk to the top of those hills? I wonder what lies on the other side—is it the sea?"

"No, Miss Cathy," I would answer, "it is hills again, just like these."

"And what are those golden rocks like, when you stand under them?" she once asked.

The abrupt descent of Penistone Craggs particularly attracted her notice, especially when the setting sun shone on it, and the topmost Heights, and the whole extent of landscape besides lay in shadow.

I explained that they were bare masses of stone, with hardly enough earth in their clefts to nourish a stunted tree.

"And why are they bright so long after it is evening here?" she pursued.

"Because they are a great deal higher up than we are," replied I, "you could not climb them, they are too high and steep. In winter the frost is always there before it comes to us, and, deep into summer, I have found snow under that black hollow on the north-east side!"

"Oh, you have been on them!" she cried, gleefully. "Then I can go, too, when I am a woman. Has papa been, Ellen?"

"Papa would tell you, Miss," I answered hastily, "that they are not worth the trouble of visiting. The moors, where you ramble with him, are much nicer, and Thrushcross park is the finest place in the world."

"But I know the park, and I don't know those," she murmured to herself. "And I should delight to look round me, from the brow of that tallest point—my little pony, Minny, shall take me sometime."

One of the maids mentioning the Fairy cave, quite turned her head with a desire to fulfil this project, she teased Mr Linton about it, and he promised she should have the journey when she got older; but Miss Catherine measured her age by months, and—

"Now, am I old enough to go to Penistone Craggs?" was the constant question in her mouth.

The road thither wound close by Wuthering Heights. Edgar had not the heart to pass it, so she received as constantly the answer,

"Not yet, love, not yet."

I said Mrs Heathcliff lived above a dozen years after quitting her husband. Her family were of a delicate constitution; she and Edgar both lacked the ruddy health that you will generally meet in these parts. What her last illness was, I am not certain, I conjecture, they died of the same thing, a kind of fever, slow at its commencement, but incurable, and rapidly consuming life towards the close.

She wrote to inform her brother of the probable conclusion of a four months' indisposition, under which she had suffered, and entreated him to come to her, if possible, for she had much to settle, and she wished to bid him adieu, and deliver Linton safely into his hands. Her hope was, that Linton might be left with him, as he had been with her, his father, she would fain convince herself, had no desire to assume the burden of his maintenance or education.

My master hesitated not a moment in complying with her request, reluctant as he was to leave home at ordinary calls, he flew to answer this, commending Catherine to my peculiar vigilance, in his absence, with reiterated orders that she must not wander out of the park, even under my escort, he did not calculate on her going unaccompanied.

He was away three weeks; the first day or two, my charge sat in a corner of the library, too sad for either reading or play—ing in that quiet state she caused me little trouble, but it was succeeded by an interval of impatient, fretful weariness, and being too busy, and too old then, to run up and down amusing her, I hit on a method by which she might entertain herself

I used to send her on her travels round the grounds—now on foot, and now on a pony, indulging her with a patient audience of all her real and imaginary adventures, when she returned

The summer shone in full prime, and she took such a taste for this solitary rambling that she often contrived to remain out from breakfast till tea, and then the evenings were spent in recounting her fanciful tales. I did not fear her breaking bounds, because the gates were generally locked, and I thought she would scarcely venture forth alone, if they had stood wide open

Unluckily, my confidence proved misplaced. Catherine came to me, one morning, at eight o'clock, and said she was that day an Arabian merchant, going to cross the Desert with his caravan, and I must give her plenty of provision for herself, and beasts, a horse, and three camels, personated by a large hound, and a couple of pointers

I got together a good store of dainties, and slung them in a basket on one side of the saddle, and she sprang up as gay as a fairy, sheltered by her wide-brimmed hat and gauze veil from the July sun, and trotted off with a merry laugh, mocking my cautious counsel to avoid galloping, and come back early

The naughty thing never made her appearance at tea. One traveller, the hound, being an old dog, and fond of its ease, returned, but neither Cathy, nor the pony, nor the two pointers were visible in any direction, and I despatched emissaries down this path, and that path, and, at last, went wandering in search of her myself

There was a labourer working at a fence round a plantation, on the borders of the grounds. I enquired of him if he had seen our young lady?

"I saw her at morn," he replied, "she would have me to cut her a hazel switch, and then she leapt her gallows over the hedge yonder, where it is lowest, and galloped out of sight"

You may guess how I felt at hearing this news. It struck me directly she must have started for Penistone Craggs

"What will become of her?" I ejaculated, pushing through a gap which the man was repairing, and making straight to the high road

I walked as if for a wager, mile after mile, till a turn brought me in view of the Heights, but no Catherine could I detect, far or near

The Craggs lie about a mile and a half beyond Mr Heathcliff's place, and that is four from the Grange, so I began to fear night would fall ere I could reach them

"And what if she should have slipped in clambering among them," I reflected, "and been killed, or broken some of her bones?"

My suspense was truly painful, and, at first, it gave me delightful relief to observe, in hurrying by the farm-house, Charlie, the fiercest of the pointers, lying under a window, with swelled head, and bleeding ear

I opened the wicket, and ran to the door, knocking vehemently for admittance. A woman whom I knew, and who formerly lived at Gimmerton, answered—she had been servant there since the death of Mr Earnshaw

"Ah," said she, "you are come a seeking your little mistress! don't be frightened. She's here safe—but I'm glad it isn't the master"

"He is not at home then, is he?" I panted, quite breathless with quick walking and alarm

"No, no," she replied "both he and Joseph are off, and I think they won't return this hour or more. Step in and rest you a bit"

I entered, and beheld my stray lamb, seated on the hearth, rocking herself in a little chair that had been her mother's, when a child. Her hat was hung against the wall, and she seemed perfectly at home, laughing and chattering, in the best spirits imaginable, to Hareton, now a great, strong lad of eighteen, who stared at her with considerable curiosity and astonishment, comprehending precious little of the fluent succession of remarks and questions which her tongue never ceased pouring forth

"Very well, Miss," I exclaimed, concealing my joy under an angry countenance. "This is your last ride, till papa comes back. I'll not trust you over the threshold again, you naughty, naughty girl"

"Aha, Ellen!" she cried gaily, jumping up, and running to my side. "I shall have a pretty story to tell to-night—and so you've found me out. Have you ever been here in your life before?"

"Put that hat on, and home at once," said I. "I'm dreadfully grieved at you, Miss Cathy, you've done extremely wrong! It's no use pouting and crying, that won't repay the trouble I've had, scouring the country after you To think how Mr Linton charged me to keep you in, and you stealing off so, it shows you are a cunning little fox, and nobody will put faith in you any more "

"What have I done?" sobbed she, instantly checked "Papa charged me nothing—he'll not scold me, Ellen—he's never cross, like you!"

"Come, come!" I repeated "I'll tie the riband Now, let us have no petulance Oh, for shame You thirteen years old, and such a baby!"

This exclamation was caused by her pushing the hat from her head, and retreating to the chimney out of my reach

"Nay," said the servant, "don't be hard on the bonny lass, Mrs Dean We made her stop—she'd fain have ridden forwards, afraid you should be uneasy But Hareton offered to go with her, and I thought he should It's a wild road over the hills "

Hareton, during the discussion, stood with his hands in his pockets, too awkward to speak, though he looked as if he did not relish my intrusion

"How long am I to wait?" I continued, disregarding the woman's interference "It will be dark in ten minutes Where is the pony, Miss Cathy? And where is Phenix? I shall leave you, unless you be quick, so please yourself "

"The pony is in the yard," she replied, "and Phenix is shut in there He's bitten—and so is Charlie I was going to tell you all about it, but you are in a bad temper, and don't deserve to hear "

I picked up her hat, and approached to reinstate it, but perceiving that the people of the house took her part, she commenced capering round the room, and, on my giving chase, ran like a mouse, over and under, and behind the furniture, rendering it ridiculous for me to pursue

Hareton and the woman laughed, and she joined them, and waxed more impertinent still, till I cried, in great irritation,

"Well, Miss Cathy, if you were aware whose house this is, you'd be glad enough to get out "

"It's your father's, isn't it?" said she, turning to Hareton

"Nay," he replied, looking down, and blushing bashfully

He could not stand a steady gaze from her eyes, though they were just his own

"Whose then—your master's?" she asked

He coloured deeper, with a different feeling, muttered an oath, and turned away

"Who is his master?" continued the tiresome girl, appealing to me "He talked about 'our house,' and 'our folk' I thought he had been the owner's son And he never said, Miss, he should have done, shouldn't he, if he's a servant?"

Hareton grew black as a thunder-cloud, at this childish speech I silently shook my questioner, and, at last, succeeded in equipping her for departure

"Now, get my horse," she said, addressing her unknown kinsman as she would one of the stable-boys at the Grange "And you may come with me I want to see where the goblin hunter rises in the marsh, and to hear about the fairishes, as you call them—but, make haste! What's the matter? Get my horse, I say "

"I'll see thee damned, before I be thy servant!" growled the lad

"You'll see me what?" asked Catherine in surprise

"Damned—thou saucy witch!" he replied

"There, Miss Cathy! you see you have got into pretty company," I interposed "Nice words to be used to a young lady! Pray don't begin to dispute with him—Come, let us seek for Minny ourselves, and begone "

"But, Ellen," cried she, staring, fixed in astonishment "How dare he speak so to me? Mustn't he be made to do as I ask him? You wicked creature, I shall tell papa what you said—Now then!"

Hareton did not appear to feel this threat, so the tears sprang into her eyes with indignation "You bring the pony," she exclaimed, turning to the woman, "and let my dog free this moment!"

"Softly, Miss," answered the addressed "You'll lose nothing, by being civil Though Mr Hareton, there, be not the master's son, he's your cousin, and I was never hired to serve you "

"He my cousin!" cried Cathy with a scornful laugh

"Yes, indeed," responded her reprover

"Oh, Ellen! don't let them say such things," she pursued in great trouble "Papa is gone to fetch my cousin from London—my cousin is a gentleman's son—That my—" she stopped, and wept outright, upset at the bare notion of relationship with such a clown

"Hush, hush!" I whispered, "people can have many cousins and of all sorts, Miss Cathy, without being any the worse for it, only they needn't keep their company, if they be disagreeable, and bad "

"He's not, he's not my cousin, Ellen!" she went on, gathering fresh grief from reflection, and flinging herself into my arms for refuge from the idea

I was much vexed at her and the servant for their mutual revelations, having no doubt of Linton's approaching arrival, communicated by the former, being reported to Mr Heathcliff, and feeling as confident that Catherine's first thought on her father's return, would be to seek an explanation of the latter's assertion, concerning her rude-bred kindred

Hareton, recovering from his disgust at being taken for a servant, seemed moved by her distress, and, having fetched the pony round to the door, he took, to propitiate her, a fine crooked-legged terrier-whelp from the kennel, and putting it into her hand, bid her wish! for he meant naught

Pausing in her lamentations, she surveyed him with a glance of awe, and horror, then burst forth anew

I could scarcely refrain from smiling at this antipathy to the poor fellow, who was a well-made, athletic youth, good looking in features, and stout and healthy, but attired in garments befitting his daily occupations of working on the farm, and lounging among the moors after rabbits and game Still, I thought I could detect in his physiognomy a mind owning better qualities than his father ever possessed Good things lost amid a wilderness of weeds, to be sure, whose rankness far over-topped their neglected growth, yet notwithstanding, evidence of a wealthy soil that might yield luxuriant crops, under other and favourable circumstances Mr Heathcliff, I believe, had not treated him physically ill, thanks to his fearless nature which offered no temptation to that course of oppression, it had none of the timid susceptibility that would have given zest to ill-treatment, in Heathcliff's judgment He appeared to have bent his malevolence on making him a brute he was never taught to read or write, never rebuked for any bad habit which did not annoy his keeper, never led a single step towards virtue, or guarded by a single precept against vice And from what I heard, Joseph contributed much to his deterioration, by a narrow-minded partiality which prompted him to flatter, and pet him, as a boy, because he was the head of the old family And as he had been in the habit of accusing Catherine Earnshaw, and Heathcliff, when children, of putting the master past his patience, and compelling him to seek solace in drink, by what he termed, their "offalld ways," so at present, he laid the whole burden of Hareton's faults on the shoulders of the usurper of his property

If the lad swore he wouldn't correct him, nor however culpably he behaved It gave Joseph satisfaction, apparently, to watch him go the worst lengths He allowed that he was ruined, that his soul was abandoned to perdition, but then, he reflected that Heathcliff must answer for it Hareton's blood would be required at his hands, and there lay immense consolation in that thought

Joseph had instilled into him a pride of name, and of his lineage, he would had he dared, have fostered hate between him and the present owner of the Heights, but his dread of that owner amounted to superstition, and he confined his feelings, regarding him, to muttered inuendoes and private comminations

I don't pretend to be intimately acquainted with the mode of living customary in those days, at Wuthering Heights I only speak from hearsay, for I saw little The villagers affirmed Mr Heathcliff was near, and a cruel hard landlord to his tenants, but the house, inside, had regained its ancient aspect of comfort under female management, and the scenes of riot common in Hindley's time, were not now enacted within its walls The master was too gloomy to seek companionship with any people, good or bad, and he is yet—

This, however, is not making progress with my story Miss Cathy rejected the peace-offering of the terrier, and demanded her own dogs, Charlie and Phenix They came limping, and hanging their heads, and we set out for home, sadly out of sorts, every one of us

I could not wring from my little lady how she had spent the day, except that, as I supposed, the goal of her pilgrimage was Penistone Crag, and she arrived without adventure to the gate of the farmhouse, when Hareton happened to issue forth, attended by some canine followers who attacked her train

They had a smart battle, before their owners could separate them that formed an introduction Catherine told Hareton who she was, and where she was going, and asked him to show her the way, finally, beguiling him to accompany her

He opened the mysteries of the Fairy cave, and twenty other queer places, but, being in disgrace, I was not favoured with the description of the interesting objects she saw

I could gather however, that her guide had been a favourite till she hurt his feelings by addressing him as a servant, and Heathcliff's housekeeper hurt hers, by calling him her cousin

Then the language he had held to her rankled in her heart, she who was always "love," and "darling," and "queen," and "angel," with everybody at the Grange, to be insulted so shockingly by a stranger! She did not comprehend it, and hard work I had, to obtain a promise that she would not lay the grievance before her father

I explained how he objected to the whole household at the Heights, and how sorry he would be to find she had been there, but, I insisted most on the fact, that if she revealed my negligence of his orders, he would perhaps, be so angry that I should have to leave, and Cathy couldn't bear that prospect she pledged her word, and kept it, for my sake—after all, she was a sweet little girl

---

CHAPTER XIX

---

A LETTER, edged with black, announced the day of my master's return. Isabella was dead, and he wrote to bid me get mourning for his daughter, and arrange a room, and other accommodations, for his youthful nephew

Catherine ran wild with joy at the idea of welcoming her father back and indulged most sanguine anticipations of the innumerable excellencies of her "real" cousin

The evening of their expected arrival came. Since early morning, she had been busy, ordering her own small affairs, and now, attired in her new black frock—poor thing! her aunt's death impressed her with no definite sorrow—she obliged me, by constant worrying, to walk with her, down through the grounds, to meet them

"Linton is just six months younger than I am," she chattered as we strolled leisurely over the swells and hollows of mossy turf, under shadow of the trees "How delightful it will be to have him for a playfellow! Aunt Isabella sent papa a beautiful lock of his hair, it was lighter than mine—more flaxen, and quite as fine

I have it carefully preserved in a little glass box, and I've often thought what pleasure it would be to see its owner—Oh! I am happy—and papa, dear, dear papa! come, Ellen, let us run! come run ”

She ran, and returned and ran again, many times before my sober footsteps reached the gate, and then she seated herself on the grassy bank beside the path, and tried to wait patiently, but that was impossible, she couldn't be still a minute

“How long they are!” she exclaimed “Ah, I see some dust on the road—they are coming! No! When will they be here? May we not go a little way—half a mile, Ellen, only just half a mile? Do say yes, to that clump of birches at the turn!”

I refused staunchly and, at length, her suspense was ended the travelling carriage rolled in sight

Miss Cathy shrieked, and stretched out her arms, as soon as she caught her father's face, looking from the window He descended, nearly as eager as herself, and a considerable interval elapsed, ere they had a thought to spare for any but themselves

While they exchanged caresses, I took a peep in to see after Linton He was asleep, in a corner, wrapped in a warm, fur-lined cloak, as if it had been winter A pale, delicate, effeminate boy, who might have been taken for my master's younger brother, so strong was the resemblance, but there was a sickly peevishness in his aspect, that Edgar Linton never had

The latter saw me looking, and having shaken hands, advised me to close the door, and leave him undisturbed, for the journey had fatigued him

Cathy would fain have taken one glance, but her father told her to come on, and they walked together up the park, while I hastened before, to prepare the servants

“Now, darling,” said Mr Linton, addressing his daughter, as they halted at the bottom of the front steps “Your cousin is not strong, or merry as you are, and he has lost his mother, remember, a very short time since, therefore, don't expect him to play, and run about with you directly And don't harass him much by talking—let him be quiet this evening, at least, will you?”

“Yes, yes, papa,” answered Catherine, “but I do want to see him, and he hasn't once looked out ”

The carriage stopped, and the sleeper, being roused, was lifted to the ground by his uncle

“This is your cousin Cathy, Linton,” he said, putting their little hands together "She's fond of you already, and mind you don't grieve her by crying to-night Try to be cheerful now, the travelling is at an end, and you have nothing to do but rest and amuse yourself as you please "

"Let me go to bed, then," answered the boy, shrinking from Catherine's salute, and he put his fingers to his eyes to remove incipient tears

"Come, come, there's a good child," I whispered, leading him in "You'll make her weep too—see how sorry she is for you!"

I do not know whether it were sorrow for him, but his cousin put on as sad a countenance as himself, and returned to her father All three entered, and mounted to the library where tea was laid ready

I proceeded to remove Linton's cap, and mantle, and placed him on a chair by the table, but he was no sooner seated than he began to cry afresh My master inquired what was the matter

"I can't sit on a chair," sobbed the boy

"Go to the sofa then, and Ellen shall bring you some tea," answered his uncle, patiently

He had been greatly tried during the journey, I felt convinced, by his fretful, ailing charge

Linton slowly trailed himself off, and lay down Cathy carried a foot-stool and her cup to his side

At first she sat silent, but that could not last, she had resolved to make a pet of her little cousin, as she would have him to be, and she commenced stroking his curls, and kissing his cheek, and offering him tea in her saucer, like a baby This pleased him, for he was not much better, he dried his eyes, and lightened into a faint smile

"Oh, he'll do very well," said the master to me, after watching them a minute "Very well, if we can keep him, Ellen The company of a child of his own age will instil new spirit into him soon and by wishing for strength he'll gain it "

"Aye, if we can keep him!" I mused to myself, and sore misgivings came over me that there was slight hope of that And then, I thought, however will that weakling live at Wuthering Heights, between his father and Hareton? what playmates and instructors they'll be

Our doubts were presently decided, even earlier than I expected I had just taken the children up stairs, after tea was finished, and seen Linton asleep—he would not suffer me to leave him, till that was the case—I had come down, and was standing by the table in the hall, lighting a bedroom candle for Mr Edgar, when a maid stepped out of the kitchen, and informed me that Mr Heathcliff's servant, Joseph, was at the door, and wished to speak with the master

"I shall ask him what he wants first," I said, in considerable trepidation "A very unlikely hour to be troubling people, and the instant they have returned from a long journey I don't think the master can see him"

Joseph had advanced through the kitchen, as I uttered these words, and now presented himself in the hall He was donned in his Sunday garments, with his most sanctimonious and sourest face, and holding his hat in one hand, and his stick in the other, he proceeded to clean his shoes on the mat

"Good evening, Joseph," I said, coldly "What business brings you here to-night?"

"It's Maister Linton Aw mun spake tull," he answered, waving me disdainfully aside

"Mr Linton is going to bed, unless you have something particular to say, I'm sure he won't hear it now," I continued "You had better sit down in there, and entrust your message to me"

"Which is his rahm?" pursued the fellow, surveying the range of closed doors

I perceived he was bent on refusing my mediation, so very reluctantly, I went up to the library, and announced the unseasonable visiter, advising that he should be dismissed till next day

Mr Linton had no time to empower me to do so, for Joseph mounted close at my heels, and pushing into the apartment, planted himself at the far side of the table, with his two fists clapped on the head of his stick, and began in an elevated tone, as if anticipating opposition

"Hathecliff has sent me for his lad, and Aw 'munn't goa back 'baht him"

Edgar Linton was silent a minute, an expression of exceeding sorrow overcast his features, he would have pitied the child on his own account, but, recalling Isabella's hopes and fears, and anxious wishes for her son, and her commendations of him to his care, he grieved bitterly at the prospect of yielding him up, and searched in his heart how it might be avoided No plan offered itself the very exhibition of any desire to keep him would have rendered the claimant more peremptory there was nothing left but to resign him. However, he was not going to rouse him from his sleep.

"Tell Mr Heathcliff," he answered, calmly, "that his son shall come to Wuthering Heights to-morrow. He is in bed, and too tired to go the distance now. You may also tell him that the mother of Linton desired him to remain under my guardianship, and, at present, his health is very precarious."

"Noa!" said Joseph, giving a thud with his prop on the floor, and assuming an authoritative air. "Noa! that manes nowt—Hathecliff maks noa 'cahnt uh t' mother, nur yah norther—bud he'll hev his lad, und Aw mun tak him—soa now yah know!"

"You shall not to-night!" answered Linton, decisively. "Walk down stairs at once, and repeat to your master what I have said. Ellen, show him down. Go——"

And, aiding the indignant elder with a lift by the arm, he rid the room of him, and closed the door.

"Varrah weel!" shouted Joseph, as he slowly drew off. "Tuh morn, he's come husseln, and thrust him aht, if yah darr!"

---

CHAPTER XX

---

TO OBVIATE the danger of this threat being fulfilled, Mr Linton commissioned me to take the boy home early, on Catherine's pony, and, said he—

"As we shall now have no influence over his destiny, good or bad, you must say nothing of where he is gone to my daughter, she cannot associate with him hereafter, and it is better for her to remain in ignorance of his proximity, lest she should be restless, and anxious to visit the Heights—merely tell her, his father sent for him suddenly, and he has been obliged to leave us."

Linton was very reluctant to be roused from his bed, at five o'clock, and astonished to be informed that he must prepare for further travelling. But I softened off the matter by stating that he was going to spend some time with his father, Mr Heathcliff, who wished to see him so much, he did not like to defer the pleasure till he should recover from his late journey

"My father?" he cried, in strange perplexity "Mamma never told me I had a father Where does he live? I'd rather stay with uncle "

"He lives a little distance from the Grange," I replied, just beyond those hills—not so far, but you may walk over here, when you get hearty And you should be glad to go home, and to see him You must try to love him, as you did your mother, and then he will love you "

"But why have I not heard of him before?" asked Linton, ' why didn't mamma and he live together as other people do? "

"He had business to keep him in the north," I answered, "and your mother's health required her to reside in the south "

"And why didn't mamma speak to me about him?" persevered the child "She often talked of uncle, and I learnt to love him long ago How am I to love papa? I don't know him "

"Oh, all children love their parents," I said "Your mother, perhaps, thought you would want to be with him, if she mentioned him often to you Let us make haste An early ride on such a beautiful morning is much preferable to an hour's more sleep "

"Is she to go with us," he demanded "The little girl I saw yesterday?"

"Not now," replied I

"Is uncle?" he continued

"No, I shall be your companion there," I said

Linton sank back on his pillow, and fell into a brown study

"I won't go without uncle," he cried at length, "I can't tell where you mean to take me "

I attempted to persuade him of the naughtiness of showing reluctance to meet his father still he obstinately resisted any progress towards dressing, and I had to call for my master's assistance, in coaxing him out of bed

The poor thing was finally got off with several delusive assurances that his absence should be short, that Mr Edgar and Cathy would visit him, and other promises, equally ill-founded, which I invented and reiterated, at intervals, throughout the way

The pure heather-scented air, and the bright sunshine, and the gentle canter of Minny relieved his despondency, after a while He began to put questions concerning his new home, and its inhabitants, with greater interest, and liveliness

"Is Wuthering Heights as pleasant a place as Thrushcross Grange?" he inquired, turning to take a last glance into the valley, whence a light mist mounted, and formed fleecy cloud, on the skirts of the blue

"It is not so buried in trees" I replied, "and it is not quite so large, but you can see the country beautifully, all round, and the air is healthier for you—fresher, and dryer. You will, perhaps, think the building old and dark, at first—though it is a respectable house, the next best in the neighbourhood. And you will have such nice rambles on the moors! Hareton Earnshaw—that is Miss Cathy's other cousin, and so yours in a manner—will show you all the sweetest spots, and you can bring a book in fine weather, and make a green hollow your study, and, now and then, your uncle may join you in a walk, he does, frequently, walk out on the hills."

"And what is my father like?" he asked. "Is he as young and handsome as uncle?"

"He's as young," said I, "but he has black hair, and eyes, and looks sterner, and he is taller and bigger altogether. He'll not seem to you so gentle and kind at first, perhaps, because, it is not his way—still, mind you be frank and cordial with him, and naturally, he'll be fonder of you than any uncle, for you are his own."

"Black hair and eyes!" mused Linton. "I can't fancy him. Then I am not like him, am I?"

"Not much," I answered. "Not a morsel, I thought, surveying with regret the white complexion, and slim frame of my companion, and his large languid eyes. His mother's eyes save that, unless a morbid touchiness kindled them, a moment, they had not a vestige of her sparkling spirit."

"How strange that he should never come to see mama and me," he murmured. "Has he ever seen me? If he have, I must have been a baby—I remember not a single thing about him!"

"Why, Master Linton," said I, "three hundred miles is a great distance, and ten years seem very different in length, to a grown-up person, compared with what they do to you. It is probable Mr Heathcliff proposed going, from summer to summer, but never found a convenient opportunity, and now it is too late—Don't trouble him with questions on the subject, it will disturb him for no good."

The boy was fully occupied with his own cogitations for the remainder of the ride, till we halted before the farmhouse garden gate I watched to catch his impressions in his countenance. He surveyed the carved front, and low-browed lattices, the straggling gooseberry bushes, and crooked firs, with solemn intentness, and then shook his head—his private feelings entirely disapproved of the exterior of his new abode, but he had sense to postpone complaining—there might be compensation within.

Before he dismounted, I went and opened the door. It was half-past six, the family had just finished breakfast, the servant was clearing and wiping down the table. Joseph stood by his master's chair telling some tale concerning a lame horse, and Hareton was preparing for the hay-field.

"Hallo, Nelly!" cried Mr Heathcliff, when he saw me. "I feared I should have to come down and fetch my property, myself—You've brought it have you? Let us see what we can make of it."

He got up and strode to the door. Hareton and Joseph followed in gaping curiosity. Poor Linton ran a frightened eye over the faces of the three.

"Sure-ly," said Joseph, after a grave inspection, "he's swopped wi' ye, maister, an' yon's his lass!"

Heathcliff having stared his son into an ague of confusion, uttered a scornful laugh.

"God! what a beauty! what a lovely, charming thing!" he exclaimed. "Haven't they reared it on snails, and sour milk, Nelly? Oh, damn my soul! but that's worse than I expected—and the devil knows I was not sanguine!"

I bid the trembling and bewildered child get down, and enter. He did not thoroughly comprehend the meaning of his father's speech, or whether it were intended for him; indeed, he was not yet certain that the grim, sneering stranger was his father, but he clung to me with growing trepidation, and on Mr Heathcliff's taking a seat, and bidding him "come hither," he hid his face on my shoulder, and wept.

"Tut, tut!" said Heathcliff, stretching out a hand and dragging him roughly between his knees, and then holding up his head by the chin. "None of that nonsense! We're not going to hurt thee, Linton—isn't that thy name? Thou art thy mother's child, entirely! Where is my share in thee, puling chicken?"

He took off the boy's cap and pushed back his thick flaxen curls, felt his slender arms, and his small fingers, during which examination, Linton ceased crying, and lifted his great blue eyes to inspect the inspector.

"Do you know me?" asked Heathcliff, having satisfied himself that the limbs were all equally frail and feeble

"No," said Linton, with a gaze of vacant fear

"You've heard of me, I dare say?"

"No," he replied again

"No! What a shame of your mother, never to waken your filial regard for me! You are my son, then, I'll tell you, and your mother was a wicked slut to leave you in ignorance of the sort of father you possessed—Now, don't wince, and colour up! Though it is something to see you have not white blood—Be a good lad, and I'll do for you—Nelly, if you be tired you may sit down, if not get home again—I guess you'll report what you hear, and see, to the cipher at the Grange, and this thing won't be settled while you linger about it"

"Well," replied I, "I hope you'll be kind to the boy, Mr Heathcliff, or you'll not keep him long, and he's all you have akin, in the wide world that you will ever know—remember"

"I'll be very kind to him you needn't fear," he said laughing "Only nobody else must be kind to him—I'm jealous of monopolizing his affection—And, to begin my kindness, Joseph! bring the lad some breakfast—Hareton, you infernal calf, begone to your work Yes, Nell," he added when they were departed, "my son is prospective owner of your place, and I should not wish him to die till I was certain of being his successor Besides, he's mine, and I want the triumph of seeing my descendent fairly lord of their estates, my child hiring their children, to till their fathers' land for wages—That is the sole consideration which can make me endure the whelp—I despise him for himself, and hate him for the memories he revives! But, that consideration is sufficient, he's as safe with me, and shall be tended as carefully, as your master tends his own—I have a room up-stairs furnished for him, in handsome style—I've engaged a tutor, also, to come three times a week, from twenty miles distance, to teach him what he pleases to learn I've ordered Hareton to obey him and in fact, I've arranged everything with a view to preserve the superior, and the gentleman in him, above his associates—I do regret however, that he so little deserves the trouble—if I wished any blessing in the world, it was to find him a worthy object of pride, and I'm bitterly disappointed with the whey-faced whining wretch!"

While he was speaking, Joseph returned, bearing a basin of milk-porridge, and placed it before Linton He stirred round the homely mess with a look of aversion, and affirmed that he could not eat it

I saw the old man servant shared largely in his master's scorn of the child, though he was compelled to retain the sentiment in his heart, because Heathcliff plainly meant his underlings to hold him in honour

"Cannot ate it?" repeated he, peering in Linton's face, and subduing his voice to a whisper, for fear of being overheard "But Maister Hareton nivr ate nowt else, when he wer a little un und what wer gooid enough fur him's gooid enough fur yah, Aw's rayther think!"

"I shan't eat it!" answered Linton, snappishly "Take it away"

Joseph snatched up the food indignantly, and brought it to us

"Is there owt ails th' victuals?" he asked, thrusting the tray under Heathcliff's nose

"What should ail them?" he said

"Wah!" answered Joseph, "yon dainty chap says he cannut ate 'em Bud Aw guess it's raight! His mother wer just soa—we wer a'most too mucky tuh sow t' corn for makking her breed"

"Don't mention his mother to me," said the master, angrily "Get him something that he can eat, that's all What is his usual food, Nelly?"

I suggested boiled milk or tea, and the housekeeper received instructions to prepare some

Come, I reflected, his father's selfishness may contribute to his comfort He perceives his delicate constitution, and the necessity of treating him tolerably I'll console Mr Edgar by acquainting him with the turn Heathcliff's humour has taken

Having no excuse for lingering longer, I slipped out, while Linton was engaged in timidly rebuffing the advances of a friendly sheep-dog But he was too much on the alert to be cheated—as I closed the door, I heard a cry, and a frantic repetition of the words—

"Don't leave me! I'll not stay here! I'll not stay here!"

Then the latch was raised and fell—they did not suffer him to come forth I mounted Minny, and urged her to a trot, and so my brief guardianship ended

CHAPTER XXI

WE HAD SAD WORK with little Cathy that day she rose in high glee, eager to join her cousin, and such passionate tears and lamentations followed the news of his departure, that Edgar himself, was obliged to soothe her, by affirming he should come back soon, he added, however, "if I can get him," and there were no hopes of that

This promise poorly pacified her, but time was more potent, and though still, at intervals, she inquired of her father, when Linton would return, before she did see him again, his features had waxed so dim in her memory that she did not recognise him

When I chanced to encounter the housekeeper of Wuthering Heights, in paying business-visits to Gimmerton, I used to ask how the young master got on, for he lived almost as secluded as Catherine herself, and was never to be seen I could gather from her that he continued in weak health, and was a tiresome inmate She said Mr Heathcliff seemed to dislike him ever longer and worse, though he took some trouble to conceal it He had an antipathy to the sound of his voice, and could not do at all with his sitting in the same room with him many minutes together

There seldom passed much talk between them, Linton learnt his lessons, and spent his evenings in a small apartment, they called the parlour, or else lay in bed all day, for he was constantly getting coughs, and colds, and aches, and pains of some sort

"And I never knew such a faint-hearted creature," added the woman, "nor one so careful of himself He will go on, if I leave the window open, a bit late in the evening Oh! it's killing, a breath of night air! And he must have a fire in the middle of summer, and Joseph's bacca pipe is poison, and he must always have sweets and dainties, and always milk, milk for ever—heeding naught how the rest of us are pinched in winter—and there he'll sit, wrapped in his furred cloak in his chair by the fire, and some toast and water, or other slop on the hob to sip at, and if Hareton, for pity, comes to amuse him—Hareton is not bad-natured, though he's rough—they're sure to part, one swearing, and the other crying I believe the master would relish Earnshaw's thrashing him to a mummy, if he were not his son and I'm certain, he would be fit to turn him out of doors, if he knew half the nuising he gives husseln But then, he won't go into danger of temptation, he never enters the parlour, and should Linton show those ways in the house where he is, he sends him up stairs directly "

I divined, from this account, that utter lack of sympathy had rendered young Heathcliff selfish and disagreeable, if he were not so originally, and my interest in him, consequently, decayed, though still I was moved by a sense of grief at his lot, and a wish that he had been left with us

Mr Edgar encouraged me to gain information, he thought a great deal about him, I fancy, and would have run some risk to see him, and he told me once to ask the housekeeper whether he ever came into the village?

She said he had only been twice, on horseback, accompanying his father and both times he pretended to be quite knocked up for three or four days afterwards

The housekeeper left, if I recollect rightly, two years after he came, and another, whom I did not know, was her successor she lives there still

Time wore on at the Grange in its former pleasant way, till Miss Cathy reached sixteen On the anniversary of her birth we never manifested any signs of rejoicing, because it was, also, the anniversary of my late mistress's death Her father invariably spent that day alone in the library, and walked, at dusk, as far as Gimmerton kirkyard, where he would frequently prolong his stay beyond midnight Therefore Catherine was thrown on her own resources for amusement

This twentieth of March was a beautiful spring day, and when her father had retired, my young lady came down dressed for going out, and said she had asked to have a ramble on the edge of the moors with me, and Mr Linton had given her leave, if we went only a short distance, and were back within the hour

"So make haste, Ellen!" she cried "I know where I wish to go, where a colony of moor game are settled, I want to see whether they have made their nests yet"

"That must be a good distance up," I answered, "they don't breed on the edge of the moor"

"No, it's not," she said "I've gone very near with papa."

I put on my bonnet, and sallied out, thinking nothing more of the matter. She bounded before me, and returned to my side, and was off again like a young greyhound, and, at first, I found plenty of entertainment in listening to the larks singing far and near, and enjoying the sweet, warm sunshine, and watching her, my pet, and my delight, with her golden ringlets flying loose behind, and her bright cheek, as soft and pure in its bloom, as a wild rose, and her eyes radiant with cloudless pleasure. She was a happy creature, and an angel, in those days. It's a pity she could not be content.

"Well," said I, "where are your moor-game, Miss Cathy? We should be at them—the Grange park-fence is a great way off now."

"Oh, a little further—only a little further, Ellen," was her answer, continually. "Climb to that hillock, pass that bank, and by the time you reach the other side, I shall have raised the birds."

But there were so many hillocks and banks to climb and pass, that, at length, I began to be weary, and told her we must halt, and retrace our steps.

I shouted to her, as she had outstripped me, a long way, she either did not hear, or did not regard, for she still sprang on, and I was compelled to follow. Finally, she dived into a hollow, and before I came in sight of her again, she was two miles nearer Wuthering Heights than her own home, and I beheld a couple of persons arrest her, one of whom I felt convinced was Mr Heathcliff himself.

Cathy had been caught in the act of plundering, or, at least, hunting out the nests of the grouse.

The Heights were Heathcliff's land, and he was reproving the poacher.

"I've neither taken any nor found any," she said, as I toiled to them, expanding her hands in corroboration of the statement. "I didn't mean to take them, but papa told me there were quantities up here, and I wished to see the eggs."

Heathcliff glanced at me with an ill-meaning smile, expressing his acquaintance with the party, and, consequently, his malevolence towards it, and demanded who "papa" was.

"Mr Linton of Thrushcross Grange," she replied. "I thought you did not know me, or you wouldn't have spoken in that way."

"You suppose papa is highly esteemed and respected then?" he said, sarcastically

"And what are you?" inquired Catherine, gazing curiously on the speaker "That man I've seen before Is he your son?"

She pointed to Hareton, the other individual, who had gained nothing but increased bulk and strength by the addition of two years to his age he seemed as awkward and rough as ever

"Miss Cathy," I interrupted, "it will be three hours instead of one, that we are out, presently We really must go back"

"No, that man is not my son," answered Heathcliff, pushing me aside "But I have one, and you have seen him before too, and, though your nurse is in a hurry, I think both you and she would be the better for a little rest Will you just turn this nab of heath, and walk into my house? You'll get home earlier for the ease, and you shall receive a kind welcome"

I whispered to Catherine, that she mustn't, on any account, accede to the proposal, it was entirely out of the question

"Why?" she asked, aloud "I'm tired of running, and the ground is dewy—I can't sit here Let us go, Ellen! Besides, he says I have seen his son He's mistaken, I think, but I guess where he lives, at the farm-house I visited in coming from Penistone Craggs Don't you?"

"I do Come, Nelly, hold your tongue—it will be a treat for her to look in on us Hareton, get forwards with the lass You shall walk with me, Nelly"

"No, she's not going to any such place," I cried, struggling to release my arm which he had seized, but she was almost at the door-stones already, scampering round the brow at full speed Her appointed companion did not pretend to escort her, he shyed off by the road side, and vanished

"Mr Heathcliff, it's very wrong," I continued, "you know you mean no good, and there she'll see Linton, and all will be told, as soon as ever we return, and I shall have the blame"

"I want her to see Linton," he answered "he's looking better these few days, it's not often he's fit to be seen And we'll soon persuade her to keep the visit secret—where is the harm of it?"

"The harm of it is, that her father would hate me, if he found I suffered her to enter your house, and I am convinced you have a bad design in encouraging her to do so," I replied

"My design is as honest as possible I'll inform you of its whole scope," he said "That the two cousins may fall in love, and get married I'm acting generously to your master, his young chit has no expectations, and should she second my wishes, she'll be provided for, at once, as joint successor with Linton."

"If Linton died," I answered, "and his life is quite uncertain, Catherine would be the heir."

"No, she would not," he said "There is no clause in the will to secure it so, his property would go to me, but to prevent disputes, I desire their union, and am resolved to bring it about."

"And I'm resolved she shall never approach your house with me again," I returned, as we reached the gate where Miss Cathy waited our coming.

Heathcliff bid me be quiet, and, preceding us up the path, hastened to open the door. My young lady gave him several looks, as if she could not exactly make up her mind what to think of him, but now he smiled when he met her eye, and softened his voice in addressing her, and I was foolish enough to imagine the memory of her mother might disarm him from desiring her injury.

Linton stood on the hearth. He had been out, walking in the fields, for his cap was on, and he was calling to Joseph to bring him dry shoes.

He had grown tall of his age, still wanting some months of sixteen. His features were pretty yet, and his eye and complexion brighter than I remembered them, though with merely temporary lustre borrowed from the salubrious air and genial sun.

"Now, who is that?" asked Mr Heathcliff, turning to Cathy. "Can you tell?"

"Your son?" she said, having doubtfully surveyed, first one, and then the other.

"Yes, yes," answered he "but is this the only time you have beheld him? Think! Ah! you have a short memory. Linton, don't you recall your cousin, that you used to tease us so, with wishing to see?"

"What, Linton!" cried Cathy, kindling into joyful surprise at the name. "Is that little Linton? He's taller than I am! Are you Linton?"

The youth stepped forward, and acknowledged himself: she kissed him fervently, and they gazed with wonder at the change time had wrought in the appearance of each.

Catherine had reached her full height, her figure was both plump and slender, elastic as steel, and her whole aspect sparkling with health and spirits Linton's looks and movements were very languid, and his form extremely slight, but there was a grace in his manner that mitigated these defects, and rendered him not unpleasing

After exchanging numerous marks of fondness with him, his cousin went to Mr Heathcliff, who lingered by the door, dividing his attention between the objects inside, and those that lay without, pretending, that is, to observe the latter, and really noting the former alone

"And you are my uncle, then!" she cried, reaching up to salute him "I thought I liked you, though you were cross, at first Why don't you visit at the Grange with Linton? To live all these years such close neighbours, and never see us, is odd, what have you done so for?"

"I visited it once or twice too often before you were born," he answered "There—damn it! If you have any kisses to spare, give them to Linton—they are thrown away on me"

"Naughty Ellen!" exclaimed Catherine, flying to attack me next with her lavish caresses "Wicked Ellen! to try to hinder me from entering But, I'll take this walk every morning in future—may I, uncle—and sometimes bring papa? Won't you be glad to see us?"

"Of course!" replied the uncle, with a hardly suppressed grimace, resulting from his deep aversion to both the proposed visitors "But stay," he continued, turning towards the young lady "Now I think of it, I'd better tell you Mr Linton has a prejudice against me, we quarrelled at one time of our lives, with unchristian ferocity, and, if you mention coming here to him, he'll put a veto on your visits altogether Therefore, you must not mention it, unless you be careless of seeing your cousin hereafter—you may come, if you will, but you must not mention it"

"Why did you quarrel?" asked Catherine, considerably crestfallen

"He thought me too poor to wed his sister," answered Heathcliff, "and was grieved that I got her—his pride was hurt, and he'll never forgive it"

"That's wrong!" said the young lady "some time, I'll tell him so, but Linton and I have no share in your quarrel I'll not come here, then, he shall come to the Grange"

"It will be too far for me," murmured her cousin, "to walk four miles would kill me No, come here, Miss Catherine, now and then, not every morning, but once or twice a week"

The father launched towards his son a glance of bitter contempt

"I am afraid, Nelly, I shall lose my labour," he muttered to me "Miss Catherine, as the nunn calls her, will discover his value, and send him to the devil Now if it had been Hareton—do you know that, twenty times a day, I covet Hareton, with all his degradation? I'd have loved the lad had he been some one else But I think he's safe from her love I'll pit him against that paltry creature, unless it bestir itself briskly We calculate it will scarcely last till it is eighteen Oh, confound the vapid thing He's absorbed in drying his feet, and never looks at her—Linton!"

"Yes, father," answered the boy

"Have you nothing to show your cousin anywhere about, not even a rabbit, or a weasel's nest? Take her into the garden, before you change your shoes, and into the stable to see your horse"

"Wouldn't you rather sit here?" asked Linton, addressing Cathy in a tone which expressed reluctance to move again

"I don't know," she replied, casting a longing look to the door, and evidently eager to be active

He kept his seat, and shrank closer to the fire

Heathcliff rose, and went into the kitchen, and from thence to the yard, calling out for Hareton

Hareton responded, and presently the two re-entered The young man had been washing himself, as was visible by the glow on his cheeks, and his wetted hair

"Oh, I'll ask you, uncle," cried Miss Cathy, recollecting the housekeeper's assertion "That's not my cousin, is he?"

"Yes," he replied, "your mother's nephew Don't you like him?"

Catherine looked queer

"Is he not a handsome lad?" he continued

The uncivil little thing stood on tiptoe, and whispered a sentence in Heathcliff's ear

He laughed, Hareton darkened, I perceived he was very sensitive to suspected slights, and had obviously a dim notion of his inferiority But his master or guardian chased the frown by exclaiming—

"You'll be the favourite among us, Hareton! She says you are a—What was it? Well, something very flattering—Here! you go with her round the farm And behave like a gentleman, mind!"

Don't use any bad words, and don't stare, when the young lady is not looking at you, and be ready to hide your face when she is, and, when you speak, say your words slowly, and keep your hands out of your pockets. Be off, and entertain her as nicely as you can."

He watched the couple walking past the window. Earnshaw had his countenance completely averted from his companion. He seemed studying the familiar landscape with a stranger's, and an artist's interest.

Catherine took a sly look at him, expressing small admiration. She then turned her attention to seeking out objects of amusement for herself, and tripped merrily on, lilting a tune to supply the lack of conversation.

"I have tied his tongue," observed Heathcliff. "He'll not venture a single syllable, all the time! Nelly, you recollect me at his age—nay, some years younger—Did I ever look so stupid, so 'gaumless,' as Joseph calls it?"

"Worse," I replied, "because more sullen with it."

"I've a pleasure in him!" he continued reflecting aloud. "He has satisfied my expectations—If he were a born fool I should not enjoy it half so much—But he's no fool, and I can sympathize with all his feelings, having felt them myself—I know what he suffers now, for instance, exactly—it is merely a beginning of what he shall suffer, though. And he'll never be able to emerge from his bathos of coarseness, and ignorance. I've got him faster than his scoundrel of a father secured me, and lower, for he takes a pride in his brutishness. I've taught him to scorn everything extra-animal, as silly and weak—Don't you think Hindley would be proud of his son, if he could see him? almost as proud as I am of mine—But there's this difference, one is gold put to the use of paving stones, and the other is tin polished to ape a service of silver—Mine has nothing valuable about it, yet I shall have the merit, of making it go as far as such poor stuff can go. His had first-rate qualities, and they are lost—rendered worse than un-availing—I have nothing to regret, he would have more than any, but I, are aware of—And the best of it is, Hareton is damnably fond of me! You'll own that I've out-matched Hindley there—If the dead villain could rise from his grave to abuse me for his offspring's wrongs, I should have the fun of seeing the said offspring fight him back again, indignant that he should dare to rail at the one friend he has in the world!"

Heathcliff chuckled a fiendish laugh at the idea, I made no reply, because I saw that he expected none

Meantime, our young companion, who sat too removed from us to hear what was said, began to evince symptoms of uneasiness probably repenting that he denied himself the treat of Catherine's society, for fear of a little fatigue

His father remarked the restless glances wandering to the window, and the hand irresolutely extended towards his cap

"Get up, you idle boy!" he exclaimed with assumed heartiness "Away after them they are just at the corner, by the stand of hives"

Linton gathered his energies, and left the hearth The lattice was open and, as he stepped out, I heard Cathy inquiring of her unsociable attendant, what was that inscription over the door?

Hareton stared up, and scratched his head like a true clown "It's some damnable writing," he answered "I cannot read it"

"Can't read it?" cried Catherine, "I can read it It's English but I want to know, why it is there"

Linton giggled—the first appearance of mirth he had exhibited "He does not know his letters," he said to his cousin "Could you believe in the existence of such a colossal dunce?"

"Is he all as he should be?" asked Miss Cathy seriously, "or is he simple not right? I've questioned him twice now, and each time he looked so stupid, I think he does not understand me, I can hardly understand him I'm sure!"

Linton repeated his laugh, and glanced at Hareton tauntingly, who certainly, did not seem quite clear of comprehension at that moment

"There's nothing the matter, but laziness, is there, Earnshaw?" he said "My cousin fancies you are an idiot There you experience the consequence of scorning 'book-larning,' as you would say Have you noticed, Catherine, his frightful Yorkshire pronunciation?"

"Why, where the devil is the use on't?" growled Hareton, more ready in answering his daily companion He was about to enlarge further, but the two youngsters broke into a noisy fit of merriment, my giddy Miss being delighted to discover that she might turn his strange talk to matter of amusement

"Where is the use of the devil in that sentence?" tuttered Linton "Papa told you not to say any bad words, and you can't open your mouth without one      Do try to behave like a gentleman, now do!"

"If thou weren't more a lass than a lad, I'd fell thee this minute, I would, pitiful lath of a crater!" retorted the angry boor retreating, while his face burnt with mingled rage, and mortification, for he was conscious of being insulted, and embarrassed how to resent it

Mr Heathcliff having overheard the conversation, as well as I, smiled when he saw him go, but immediately afterwards, cast a look of singular aversion on the flippant pair, who remained chattering in the door-way. The boy finding animation enough while discussing Hareton's faults, and deficiencies, and relating anecdotes of his goings on, and the girl relishing his pert and spiteful sayings, without considering the ill-nature they evinced but I began to dislike, more than to compassionate, Linton, and to excuse his father, in some measure, for holding him cheap

We staid till afternoon. I could not tear Miss Cathy away, before but happily my master had not quitted his apartment, and remained ignorant of our prolonged absence

As we walked home, I would fain have enlightened my charge on the characters of the people we had quitted, but she got it into her head that I was prejudiced against them

"Aha!" she cried, "you take papa's side, Ellen—you are partial

I know, or else you wouldn't have cheated me so many years, into the notion that Linton lived a long way from here. I'm really extremely angry, only, I'm so pleased, I can't show it! But you must hold your tongue about my uncle—he's my uncle remember, and I'll scold papa for quarrelling with him."

And so she ran on, till I dropped endeavouring to convince her of her mistake

She did not mention the visit that night, because she did not see Mr Linton. Next day it all came out, sadly to my chagrin, and still I was not altogether sorry. I thought the burden of directing and warning would be more efficiently borne by him than me, but he was too timid in giving satisfactory reasons for his wish that she would shun connection with the household of the Heights, and Catherine liked good reasons for every restraint that harassed her petted will

"Papa!" she exclaimed after the morning's salutations, "guess whom I saw yesterday, in my walk on the moors. Ah, papa, you started! you've not done right, have you, now? I saw—But listen, and you shall hear how I found you out, and Ellen, who is in league with you, and yet pretended to pity me so, when I kept hoping, and was always disappointed about Linton's coming back!"

She gave a faithful account of her excursion and its consequences, and my master, though he cast more than one reproachful look at me, said nothing, till she had concluded. Then he drew her to him, and asked if she knew why he had concealed Linton's near neighbourhood from her? Could she think it was to deny her a pleasure that she might harmlessly enjoy?

"It was because you disliked Mr Heathcliff," she answered.

"Then you believe I care more for my own feelings than yours, Cathy?" he said. "No, it was not because I disliked Mr Heathcliff, but because Mr Heathcliff dislikes me, and is a most diabolical man, delighting to wrong and ruin those he hates, if they give him the slightest opportunity. I knew that you could not keep up an acquaintance with your cousin, without being brought into contact with him, and I knew he would detest you, on my account, so, for your own good, and nothing else, I took precautions that you should not see Linton again—I meant to explain this sometime as you grew older, and I'm sorry I delayed it!"

"But Mr Heathcliff was quite cordial, papa," observed Catherine, not at all convinced, "and he didn't object to our seeing each other. He said I might come to his house, when I pleased, only I must not tell you, because you had quarrelled with him, and would not forgive him for marrying Aunt Isabella. And you won't—you are the one to be blamed—he is willing to let us be friends, at least, Linton and I—and you are not."

My master, perceiving that she would not take his word for her uncle-in-law's evil disposition, gave a hasty sketch of his conduct to Isabella, and the manner in which Wuthering Heights became his property. He could not bear to discourse long upon the topic, for though he spoke little of it, he still felt the same horror and detestation of his ancient enemy that had occupied his heart ever since Mrs Linton's death. "She might have been living yet, if it had not been for him!" was his constant bitter reflection, and, in his eyes, Heathcliff seemed a murderer.

Miss Cathy, conversant with no bad deeds except her own slight acts of disobedience, injustice and passion, rising from hot temper, and thoughtlessness, and repented of on the day they were committed, was amazed at the blackness of spirit that could brood on, and cover revenge for years, and deliberately prosecute its plans, without a visitation of remorse. She appeared so deeply impressed and shocked at this new view of human nature—excluded from all her studies and all her ideas till now—that Mr Edgar deemed it unnecessary to pursue the subject. He merely added,

“You will know hereafter, darling, why I wish you to avoid his house and family—now, return to your old employments and amusements, and think no more about them!”

Catherine kissed her father, and sat down quietly to her lessons for a couple of hours, according to custom. Then she accompanied him into the grounds, and the whole day passed as usual. But in the evening, when she had retired to her room, and I went to help her to undress, I found her crying, on her knees by the bedside.

“Oh, fie, silly child!” I exclaimed. “If you had any real griefs, you’d be ashamed to waste a tear on this little contrariety. You never had one shadow of substantial sorrow, Miss Catherine. Suppose, for a minute, that master and I were dead, and you were by yourself in the world—how would you feel, then? Compare the present occasion with such an affliction as that, and be thankful for the friends you have, instead of coveting more.”

“I’m not crying for myself, Ellen,” she answered, “it’s for him—He expected to see me again, to-morrow, and there, he’ll be so disappointed—and he’ll wait for me, and I shan’t come!”

“Nonsense,” said I. “do you imagine he has thought as much of you, as you have of him? Hasn’t he Hareton, for a companion? Not one in a hundred would weep at losing a relation they had just seen twice, for two afternoons—Linton will conjecture how it is, and trouble himself no further about you.”

“But may I not write a note to tell him why I cannot come?” she asked, rising to her feet. “And just send those books, I promised to lend him—his books are not as nice as mine, and he wanted to have them extremely, when I told him how interesting they were—May I not, Ellen?”

“No, indeed, no, indeed!” replied I with decision. “Then he would write to you, and there’d never be an end of it—No, Miss Catherine, the acquaintance must be dropped entirely—so papa expects, and I shall see that it is done.”

“But how can one little note——” she recommenced, putting on an imploring countenance.

"Silence!" I interrupted "We will not begin with your little notes—Get into bed"

She threw at me a very naughty look so naughty that I would not kiss her good-night at first I covered her up and shut her door, in great displeasure—but, repenting half-way, I returned softly, and lo! there was Miss, standing at the table with a bit of blank paper before her, and a pencil in her hand, which she guiltily slipped out of sight, on my re-entrance

"You'll get nobody to take that, Catherine," I said, "if you write it, and at present I shall put out your candle"

I set the extinguisher on the flame, receiving as I did so, a slap on my hand, and a petulant 'cross thing'" I then quitted her again, and she drew the bolt in one of her worst, most peevish humours

The letter was finished and forwarded to its destination by a milk-fetcher who came from the village but that I didn't learn till some time afterwards Weeks passed on, and Cathy recovered her temper, though she grew wondrous fond of stealing off to corners by herself, and often, if I came near her suddenly while reading she would start, and bend over the book, evidently desirous to hide it, and I detected edges of loose paper sticking out beyond the leaves

She also got a trick of coming down early in the morning, and lingering about the kitchen, as if she were expecting the arrival of something, and she had a small drawer in a cabinet in the library which she would trifle over for hours, and whose key she took special care to remove when she left it

One day, as she inspected this drawer, I observed that the play-things, and trinkets which recently formed its contents, were transmuted into bits of folded paper

My curiosity and suspicions were roused, I determined to take a peep at her mysterious treasures, so, at night, as soon as she and my master were safe up stairs, I searched and readily found among my house keys, one that would fit the lock Having opened, I emptied the whole contents into my apron, and took them with me to examine at leisure in my own chamber

Though I could not but suspect, I was still surprised to discover that they were a mass of correspondence, daily almost, it must have been, from Linton Heathcliff, answers to documents forwarded by her The earlier dated were embarrassed and short, gradually however they expanded into copious love letters, foolish as the age of the writer rendered natural, yet with touches, here and there, which I thought, were borrowed from a more experienced source

Some of them struck me as singularly odd compounds of ardour, and flatness, commencing in strong feeling, and concluding in the affected, wordy way that a school-boy might use to a fancied, incorporeal sweetheart

Whether they satisfied Cathy, I don't know, but they appeared very worthless trash to me

After turning over as many as I thought proper, I tied them in a handkerchief, and set them aside, re-locking the vacant drawer

Following her habit, my young lady descended early, and visited the kitchen I watched her go to the door, on the arrival of a certain little boy, and, while the dairy maid filled his can, she tucked something into his jacket pocket, and plucked something out

I went round by the garden, and laid wait for the messenger, who fought valorously to defend his trust, and we spilt the milk between us, but I succeeded in abstracting the epistle, and threatening serious consequences if he did not look sharp home, I remained under the wall, and perused Miss Cathy's affectionate composition It was more simple and more eloquent than her cousin's, very pretty and very silly I shook my head, and went meditating into the house

The day being wet, she could not divert herself with rambling about the park, so, at the conclusion of her morning studies, she resorted to the solace of the drawer Her father sat reading at the table, and I, on purpose, had sought a bit of work in some unripped fringes of the window curtain, keeping my eye steadily fixed on her proceedings

Never did any bird flying back to a plundered nest which it had left brim-ful of chirping young ones, express more complete despair in its anguished cries, and flutterings, than she by her single "Oh!" and the change that transfigured her late happy countenance Mr Linton looked up

"What is the matter, love? Have you hurt yourself?" he said

His tone and look assured her he had not been the discoverer of the hoard

"No, papa—" she gasped "Ellen! Ellen! come up-stairs—I'm sick!"

I obeyed her summons, and accompanied her out

"Oh, Ellen! you have got them," she commenced immediately, dropping on her knees, when we were enclosed alone "O, give them to me, and I'll never never do so again! Don't tell papa—You have not told papa, Ellen, say you have not! I've been exceedingly naughty, but I won't do it any more!"

With a grave severity in my manner, I bid her stand up

"So," I exclaimed, "Miss Catherine, you are tolerably far on, it seems—you may well be ashamed of them! A fine bundle of trash you study in your leisure hours, to be sure—Why, it's good enough to be printed! And what do you suppose the master will think, when I display it before him? I haven't shown it yet, but you needn't imagine I shall keep your ridiculous secrets—For shame! And you must have led the way in writing such absurdities, he would not have thought of beginning, I'm certain"

"I didn't! I didn't!" sobbed Cathy, fit to break her heart "I didn't once think of loving him till——"

"Loving!" cried I, as scornfully as I could utter the word "Loving! Did anybody ever hear the like! I might just as well talk of loving the miller who comes once a year to buy our corn. Pretty loving, indeed, and both times together you have seen Linton hardly four hours, in your life! Now here is the babyish trash I'm going with it to the library, and we'll see what your father says to such loving"

She sprang at her precious epistles, but I held them above my head, and then she poured out further frantic entreaties that I would burn them—do anything rather than show them. And being really fully as inclined to laugh as scold, for I esteemed it all girlish vanity, I at length relented in a measure, and asked,

"If I consent to burn them, will you promise faithfully, neither to send, nor receive a letter again, nor a book, for I perceive you have sent him books, nor locks of hair, nor rings, nor playthings?"

"We don't send playthings!" cried Catherine, her pride overcoming her shame

"Nor anything at all, then, my lady!" I said "Unless you will, here I go"

"I promise, Ellen!" she cried catching my dress "Oh, put them in the fire, do, do!"

But when I proceeded to open a place with the poker, the sacrifice was too painful to be borne—She earnestly supplicated that I would spare her one or two

"One or two, Ellen, to keep for Linton's sake!"

I unknotted the handkerchief, and commenced dropping them in from an angle, and the flame curled up the chimney

"I will have one, you cruel wretch!" she screamed, darting her hand into the fire, and drawing forth some half consumed fragments, at the expense of her fingers

"Very well—and I will have some to exhibit to papa!" I answered shaking back the rest into the bundle, and turning anew to the door

She emptied her blackened pieces into the flames, and motioned me to finish the immolation. It was done, I stirred up the ashes, and interred them under a shovel full of coals, and she mutely, and with a sense of intense injury, retired to her private apartment. I descended to tell my master that the young lady's qualm of sickness was almost gone, but I judged it best for her to lie down a while

She wouldn't dine, but she re-appeared at tea, pale and red about the eyes, and marvellously subdued in outward aspect

Next morning I answered the letter by a slip of paper inscribed, "Master Heathcliff is requested to send no more notes to Miss Linton as she will not receive them." And thenceforth the little boy came with vacant pockets

---